Betty Hi, Adam! What are you watching?

Adam I'm watching a programme called Would I Lie to You? To be honest, I watch it quite often. It's a TV comedy panel show which has been running for twelve years. Have you ever seen it?

Betty No, I haven't. What is it about?

Adam Well, there are two teams that compete against one another. The team members try to make the other team believe some crazy stories. Sometimes they tell the truth, but often they lie through their teeth. The programme is getting funnier and funnier despite the fact that it's been on for so long. I've been watching it since I started high school, I think. I just love it!

Betty I can see! What are you doing after that? I'm going out for a meal with my friends. I've been studying the whole day and I'm tired. I need to chill out. Do you fancy joining us?

Adam I've ordered a pizza and it's on its way, plus another of my favourite series starts at 5:00, so I'd better stay at home.

7 Which statements are facts, not opinions, according to the texts? Write the answers in your notebook.

1 Painting Projections is an unusual work of art.
2 Painting Projections was watched by many people.
3 Improv Everywhere is becoming more and more known.
4 Improv Everywhere's events are not an obvious form of art.
5 Willard Wigan is one of the most talented artists in Britain.

A Axel Gercke and his 3D art

Axel Gercke projects his paintings onto city buildings, using a 3D mapping technology.

One of his unique creations is Painting Projections, which was shown during the Light Move Festival in Łódź in 2013. I was there to watch this amazing spectacle of visual and sound effects, and I could actually see the artist's hand creating graffiti-style images to the rhythm of the music as if he was colouring a piece of paper rather than the walls of a house. I just stood there in silence surrounded by a crowd of other viewers, admiring this work of art. Although the projection only lasted a few minutes, it made a huge impression on me.

2 a group of performers • organise an event • in a public place • dance

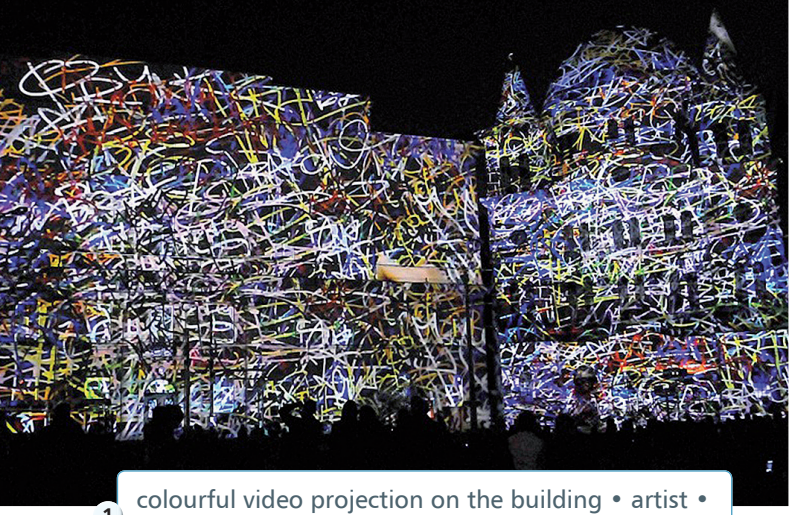
C The miniature fine art of Willard Wigan

Willard Wigan is considered by some art critics to be one of the most original and gifted sculptors in Britain. His microscopic masterpieces, made for example from a grain of sand, might be only 0.005 mm tall. He often places them in the eye of a needle and paints them with a hair from a dead fly. It's hard to believe that anyone can create such an incredible piece of art.

At first, Wigan's miniature art was an escape from reality. As a young boy, he was made fun of at school, so he turned to art. He started making things so small that no one could see them and laugh at them. According to his online profile, his first creations were shoes and hats – for ants!

3 tiny colourful figures • eye of the needle • hard to see without a microscope

6 Willard Wigan's sculptures are impossible to make.
7 Willard Wigan's first works were pieces of clothing.
8 Jon Rose plays a variety of musical styles.
9 Jon Rose's music is generally appreciated by people worldwide.



1 colourful video projection on the building • artist • turn a building into a work of art • look amazing

B Improv Everywhere – a performance art group

Imagine you have subscribed to an email list and received a message on your smartphone with special instructions: you're told to go to a public place and do something unusual, like putting on a funny mask or taking part in a water gun fight. Interested? Well, this is typical of one of the many events staged throughout the year by Improv Everywhere, a contemporary comic performance art group from New York City, whose popularity is growing rapidly judging by the increasing number of subscribers it has on YouTube.

The group uses the slogan 'We Cause Scenes' and its performers carry out pranks in public places to give the audience a laugh. The events don't look like artistic happenings at first but like the spontaneous actions of hundreds of complete strangers, which confuses the people around them. Watching such a big crowd all doing the same things at the same time makes you wonder if it's a form of art or just some kind of practical joke, at least as far as I'm concerned. To be honest, I never know. What do you think?

D The art of 'fencology'

There are some musicians who perceive traditional instruments as "too mainstream, common, uninspiring". One such artist probably is the Australian musician Jon Rose, a violinist by profession, who has been playing on various sorts of fences for the past thirty years. He calls himself a fencologist, and he's been seen playing his music on army fences or barbed wire using just a bow. His musical pieces, which appeal to me a great deal, vary depending on the type of fence he uses. His music may sound like anything from electronic music or drum music to high tones resembling screeching sounds. He plays worldwide on fences which divide nations, and often says that he would appreciate hearing millions of miles of string instrument music more than seeing millions of miles of fences separating nations.

8 Complete the sentences so that they are true about the texts. Write the answers in your notebook.

2 What makes you choose a film at the cinema: the title, the cast, the film director or someone's recommendation?
3 What are the best and worst films you have ever watched? Why do you think so?

a The recommendation
b General information
c The storyline
d Strong and weak points

Hi everyone! I want to tell you about a film which should appeal to teenagers: The Fault in Our Stars.

1 This moving romantic drama was directed by Josh Boone and it stars Shailene Woodley and Ansel Elgort. It is based on the best-selling novel by the American author John Green, who was inspired by the story of a real 16-year-old cancer patient.

2 The main characters are two teenage book lovers who meet and fall in love at a cancer support group. They decide to travel to Amsterdam, where they become lovers.

3 The phenomenal acting was definitely the best thing about the movie. I found the whole plot very engaging too. One disappointing thing was probably the soundtrack which was a bit too monotonous for me.

4 This film is a must-see because it talks about love and death as well as teenage dreams and fears.

That's all for now.

2 GRAMMAR

Determiners: all, every, most, some, any, no, none, etc.

1〉 Who do you go to when you need some advice about a problem? Why?

2〉 LANGUAGE IN CONTEXT Read the text. How does the writer get advice?

All teenagers have problems, but some problems are more difficult to deal with than others. Most people have their own way of coping. Every magazine seems to have its own problem page, but there is really no replacement for personal advice, is there? I've got two older sisters and both of them help me out when I'm worried about something. I don't usually go to my parents. That's because the problem is often related to them or it's something they have no idea about. They don't understand a lot of the pressure that I'm under at school. None of the magazine editors know personally the people who write in, and, in my opinion, that's important when you're trying to give some advice.

3〉 Read the blog again and correct the statements below. Write the answers in your notebook.

1 All teenage problems are difficult.
2 Everyone copes in the same way.
3 Magazine problem pages are as good as personal advice.
4 The writer asks one of his sisters for advice.

4〉 ANALYSE Look at the highlighted words in the text in exercise 2 and the determiners below. Which of them can be used ...?

a few every a little some any most many all a couple of none of both of a lot of much no a with singular countable nouns b with plural nouns

c with uncountable nouns

Tip

We can use the determiners some, any, many, most and all in the two different ways shown below (with of and without of). Always use of when the determiner is followed by a pronoun.

There were some students in the classroom. Many of them were reading books.

5〉 In your notebook, write examples from the text in exercise 2 to illustrate each pattern below.

determiner + of + the/my/her + noun/pronoun	determiner + noun

2 CD 1.11 LANGUAGE IN CONTEXT Read and listen to the dialogue. Are you more like James or Lucy?

James So this is almost the last day of university and the end of our studying. I can't believe we finish tomorrow. Next step – work! I wonder where we'll be in ten years' time. What do you think you'll be doing?

Lucy Well, with luck, I'll be earning a lot of money because I'm going to find a well-paid job! I imagine I'll have got married by then, but I probably won't have had any children. That can wait! I'll have married someone rich, so we won't be living in a small flat, but in a big country house! What will you have done by then?

James Good luck with that! I definitely won't have got married by then, but I certainly won't be living at home either. Perhaps I'll be sharing a flat with a friend. Will you still be riding your bike everywhere? I'll have learned to drive by next year, so I'll be able to come and visit you in the country! Well, talking of the very near future, what are you doing tonight, Lucy? Fancy eating out?

Lucy Why not? I'm not doing anything special. How about going to the new Chinese place? I promise I won't be late this time.

James OK, I'll be waiting outside. 7 p.m. sharp!

2 Dan / finish classes / by 3.00 [–]

4› Read the text and answer the questions.

1 Where is Bridget? Why is she there?
2 How old is she and what does she do for a living?
3 Who is she introduced to at the party? Do you think she likes this person?

I'm not a child any more – I'm in my thirties with a flat and a job in London. But every year my mother makes me go to Una and Geoffrey Alconbury's New Year's Day Turkey Lunch. She usually tries to introduce me to a man she thinks would be a good boyfriend for me. But she always chooses the most awful men.

This year, for weeks before New Year's Day, my mother had talked about Mark Darcy. 'Do you remember Malcolm and Elaine Darcy, darling?' she kept saying. 'They're bringing their son Mark with them to Una's New Year's Day Turkey Lunch. He's a top lawyer – just back from America. He's just got divorced.' I don't know why my mother didn't just say openly, 'Darling, Mark Darcy would make a very good boyfriend for you. He's very rich.'

11.45 p.m. Ugh! The first day of the New Year has been awful. I took the wrong road on the way to the Alconburys', so I got lost and arrived very late.

'Bridget! Happy New Year!' said Geoffrey Alconbury. He gave me a huge hug. 'Come on, let's get you a drink. How's your love life?'

'Fine,' I said in an embarrassed way.

'So you still haven't got a boyfriend!' said Geoffrey in a loud voice.

'If you don't hurry up and get married soon, you'll be too old to have children,' said Una, his wife. 'Come along and meet Mark.'

The rich, divorced Mark was standing with his back to us. He was quite tall and was looking at the books on the Alconburys' bookshelves.

'Mark!' said Una. 'I've got someone nice for you to meet.'

Mark Darcy turned round, and I saw that he was wearing a jumper with a pattern of yellow and blue diamonds on the front. It was awful.

'Mark, this is Colin and Pam's daughter, Bridget,' said Una. 'Bridget works in publishing, don't you, Bridget? Well, I'll leave you two young people together.' She went away quickly.

For a moment neither of us spoke.

'Um … have you been staying with your parents over New Year?' I asked him.

'Yes,' he said eagerly. 'You too?'

'Yes. No. I was at a party in London last night,' I replied. Suddenly I started talking very quickly – too quickly. But I couldn't stop. Mark Darcy was looking at me with a look of horror on his face.

'Maybe you should get something to eat,' he said and went away. Everyone was staring at me. I knew they were thinking, 'So that's why Bridget isn't married. She talks too much and is unattractive to men.'

5 Which information below is mentioned in the text? Write the answers in your notebook.

1 Bridget did not fancy going to the Alconburys' party.
2 Bridget's mother had wanted her to meet Mark Darcy before the party.

5 Bridget would like to start a family very soon.
6 Mark Darcy's manners made a good first impression on Bridget.
7 Mark and Bridget were silent for a while after they met.

WRITING 2
an opinion essay

1〉 Work in pairs. Which of the following statements do you agree with? Why?

1 Social networking sites are the best places to meet new people.
2 In the future even best friends will communicate mainly online.
3 Online dating is a good way for shy people to find a partner.

2〉 Read the task and the example essay. How do the opinions of parents and teenagers differ?

Dorośli coraz częściej wyrażają obawy, że młodzież udziela się towarzysko tylko na forach społecznościowych. Napisz rozprawkę (200–250 wyrazów), w której wyrazisz swoje zdanie na temat tego zjawiska, uwzględniając argumenty rodziców oraz ich nastoletnich dzieci.

As far as I am concerned, social networking sites make our social life more varied and exciting. More and more adults worry, however, that social media are teenagers' only means of interacting with their peers.

Firstly, many parents have trouble understanding their teenage children's need to be constantly connected to the Internet. This may be because they themselves use the Internet for work purposes rather than social reasons. As a result of this, online friendships do not seem acceptable to them as they would prefer their teenagers to socialise in the real world rather than the virtual one. Additionally, parents cannot control their children's online activity and fear that their teenage child may, for example, become a victim of cyberbullying.

As regards teenagers, they consider social networking sites a very important channel of communication with others and a source of entertainment as well as knowledge. The sites allow them to stay in touch with a lot of people at the same time, share photos, play games, blog or even do school projects outside of class. It would be hard to deny the fact that the Internet provides them with all they need: contact with their friends, fun and education.

In conclusion, I would say that social networking sites help young people make friends with others and develop their social skills despite all the concerns adults may have. Since we are surrounded by internet technology, grown-ups must accept the fact that online communication is here to stay.

3〉 Read the essay in exercise 2 again. In your notebook, complete the tip.

b Do you agree that more and more young people leave the family home very late in life? Is it a good or bad idea?
c More and more young adults choose to live with their parents rather than live on their own. I strongly feel that this is a good solution for both the children and their parents.
d As far as I am concerned, young people cannot become independent because of unemployment. That's why they live with their parents.

2 Have you kept in touch with anyone from when you were a child? Who?
3 Are reunions a good idea? Why?/Why not?

Tip

Zadanie to polega na dokładnym przeczytaniu tekstu i uzupełnieniu zdań odpowiednimi informacjami. Uzupełniane zdania są parafrazą części tekstu. W związku z tym należy najpierw ustalić, którego fragmentu tekstu dotyczy każde zdanie, i zastanowić się, jak uzupełnić zdania, zachowując przy tym poprawność językową.

2 Read the text and find the fragments which relate to sentences 1–3.

Reunion parties may at times be frustrating. I mean, it's good to see your old classmates again and find out how they are doing in life, etc., but at the same time you face a few challenges. First and foremost, you realise that you are no longer a spring chicken. Then you begin to compare yourself with the others. You start to wonder how successful you have been by comparison, and if someone fares better, you feel a little jealous at the very least. What's worse, you eye one another silently and suspiciously, and make judgements about other people's looks, and you feel that everyone is staring at you and all that. Do you feel the same about reunions, or is it just me?

1 However enjoyable, reunions may be ___.
2 During the reunion party, people end up ___ to their former classmates.
3 Ex-classmates ___ as well, and it's really bad.

3 Work in pairs and decide what changes you need to make to complete the sentences in exercise 2. How many words do you need to use in each case? Do you have to use different parts of speech?

Tip

Zdania do uzupełnienia mogą dotyczyć informacji szczegółowych, ale mogą także wymagać wyciągnięcia wniosku, zinterpretowania informacji podanej pośrednio lub nastawienia autora tekstu do omawianego problemu.

4 Read the text in exercise 2 again and find the fragments in the text which relate to questions 1–3.

1 What do you often realise first when you go to a reunion meeting?
2 Why may you feel jealous of your ex-classmates?
3 How do reunion parties make the author feel?

5 In your notebook, write the answers to the questions in exercise 4 using your own words.

6 TEST IT! Przeczytaj poniższy tekst, a następnie uzupełnij zdania 1–5 informacjami z tekstu. Zapisz odpowiedzi w zeszycie.

A BIT OF A SHOCK!

We don't often get letters in our house. Everyone emails these days, don't they? But this morning one landed on our doormat. The postman delivered it along with all the usual junk mail that ends up going straight into the rubbish bin. It was addressed to my mum and it obviously wasn't an official bill or anything like that. Her name and address were written neatly by hand. My dad raised his eyebrows as if to say 'Who on earth writes letters these days?' I silently guessed at an old aunt or uncle. Mum read it while we were having breakfast together. For once she didn't notice me flicking toast crumbs at my brother across the table. Dad was too wrapped up in his newspaper to notice either. Suddenly her eyes lit up. 'I'm going to a reunion!' she announced. 'It's for all the students who left in 2000.' My father smiled and said something about meeting all her old boyfriends. My mum laughed at that and went a bit red. I looked at my twin brother in alarm. This was a particularly unwelcome surprise. Yesterday our headteacher had asked for some of the students in our year to help serve sandwiches and drinks at a reunion evening next month. Olly and I had both volunteered. Volunteering for things like that always made a good impression on the teachers and we both needed all the goodwill we could get at the moment. We weren't the best-behaved students in the class! Also, it would be fun to see a lot of older people pretending that they were young again, we thought. However, we hadn't realised that our mum would be one of them. How embarrassing was that going to be! 'Wonderful, Mum,' we said together (as twins, we do most things together). But we both knew that if she was going – we weren't!

1 The twins felt quite surprised when ___ first thing in the morning.
2 The mother was so ___ the letter that she paid no attention to her sons' misbehaving.
3 The mother felt a little embarrassed after the father ___ about her ex-boyfriends.
4 The twins had decided to help out at school because they ___.
5 The text may have come from ___.

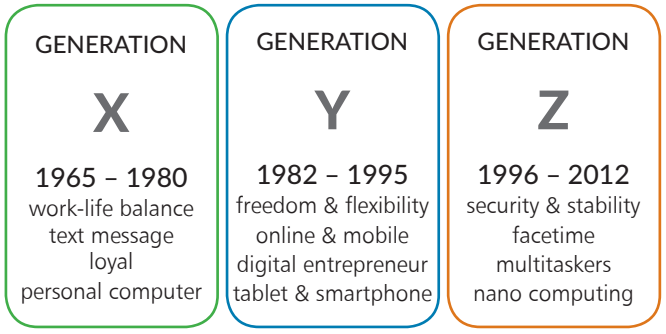
Defining relative clauses

1〉 Look at the infographic. Work with your partner and answer the questions.

1 How do you interpret the information in the infographic?
2 How do these three generations differ in terms of their professional needs?
3 Do you identify with the description of Generation Z? Why? / Why not?



2〉 LANGUAGE IN CONTEXT Read the fragment of an article about Generation Z at work. What else do you learn about their professional needs?

Generation Z

is a name which is usually used to refer to people who were born between 1995–2012. It's the next generation who came after the so-called Millennials. Generation Z are about one fifth of the workforce and they will be the employees that will shape the job market for years to come. Like any other generation before, they have their aspirations and expectations. The company where they work should value authenticity, independence, competition and teamwork at the same time. This generation also insists on the so-called digital fitness which is upgrading their technology so that it's as current as possible. Unlike Millennials, Gen Zers appreciate job security and career advancement. So, a company owner whose firm employs these individuals will have to come up with solutions that will help Gen Zers climb up the career ladder.

3〉 ANALYSE Look at the highlighted examples of defining relative pronouns in the article in exercise 2. Choose the correct options to complete the rules in your notebook.

a Defining relative clauses give extra / detailed information about a person, place or thing.
b They are important / not important to the sentence and we can't leave them out.

4〉 In your notebook, complete the rules with the correct relative pronouns.

which that whose who where 1 We use ___ for people.

2 We use ___ for things.
3 We use ___ for people or things.
4 We use ___ for places.
5 We use ___ to show that something belongs to someone.

? WHAT'S RIGHT?

1 Career development is a factor which it is important for Gen Zers.
2 Career development is a factor which is important for Gen Zers.
3 Career development is a factor that is important for Gen Zers.

5〉 PRACTISE In your notebook, complete the sentences with which, who, whose or where.

1 The employee ___ got the award was Greg.
2 I'd like to be able to write CVs ___ are professional-looking.
3 The most interesting programme ___ I watched last week was a documentary.
4 The man ___ dog was found 100 miles away was on TV last night.
5 That's the company ___ the documentary was filmed.

Tip

• A relative clause can refer to the subject or the object of a sentence.
Jane is the girl who got the job*.*
She got the job*.* (subject)
This is the girl who I met last week*.*
I met her*.* (object)
• We can leave out who, that, which in a relative clause when it refers to the object of the sentence.
This is the girl I met last week.

6〉 Look again at the sentences in exercise 5 and answer the questions.

1 In which sentences could we replace the relative pronoun with that?
2 In which sentences could we leave out the relative pronoun?

7〉 In your notebook, rewrite each pair of sentences as one sentence using a relative pronoun.

1 That's the company owner. He was in a TV programme last night.
2 I went to the conference room. I met Dave there.
3 Agatha Christie was a writer. She wrote about Hercule Poirot.
4 I'm sure it was the fish. It gave me an upset stomach.
5 That's the article. I read it yesterday.

Tip

We can also use which / that + in to talk about places, but we don't use a preposition when we use where.

That's the house which we lived in*.*
That's the house where we lived ~~in~~.

8 In your notebook, rewrite the sentences in two ways, beginning with That's … . Use where and which / that.

2 We stayed in that hotel when we were on holiday.

Until I moved to New York and was in desperate need of employment, I didn't know much about the world of temps – temporary workers that is. I may have heard of it somewhere, but probably didn't even understand what it meant or involved. I was 20 and had never had a job before.

I was a grad, and needed to land a job to support myself in the Big Apple, where I decided to settle. [1] ___ So, I started looking up temp agencies which advertised in the local newspaper. I had scanned through thousands of job adverts and applied for the post of a waitress. It seemed the most suitable of all, and guaranteed work with food lovers, people just like me. Within a few days I got the job, and off I went in the hope of making money and making new friends. [2] ___ 'What's the point?' I thought and quit.

The next job I applied for was a shop assistant. The pay was better, and the working hours more humane. I enjoyed the company of my colleagues, but the customers proved a little too much. I simply wasn't patient enough to deal with their 'fussy' questions and all that. After the shop I worked as an au pair and a call centre girl, neither any good because somewhere deep down I felt that both jobs weren't for me.

The good thing about being a temp, though, was that I could try out different professions, and experience various working environments. [3] ___ You just need to consider your short-term employment as an audition for a greater role, building your portfolio, getting skilled.

As for the cons, well, there is no job security when you are a temp. You also don't get any job benefits or holiday allowances, and what's worse, you are asked to do more mundane tasks rather than those more glamorous ones.

All in all, if you are currently looking for a temp job, I would give it a go, just to see what you are cut out to do in your professional life. I stayed in New York for three years, doing various temporary jobs before I finally knew what I wanted to do for a career. Was it a waste of time? No, not for me. I got to know myself better, and made lots of connections. [4] ___ Any regrets? I'll tell you next time. ☺

Dear Mr O'Connelly,

I am writing to apply for a job in the retail sector as part of the Work & Travel scheme in Ireland. I am particularly interested in the position of a sales assistant listed on your website. My reason for applying is that this post will allow me to use my experience and learn new skills.

Currently, I am a high school graduate. I have applied for a place at the University of Lodz to study marketing and management. I am due to start the course in October. My ambition is to continue education, receive a Bachelor's degree and pursue a career in the retail industry.

I have also been involved in a number of projects where I was responsible for the whole organisation and management from beginning to end. I was put in charge of teams on numerous occasions, and I managed to prove myself as a very communicative, approachable and reliable leader. I believe I have ample experience to work in a team and to be entrusted with more serious tasks.

I believe that my experience as well as personal qualities make me a good candidate for the position advertised. I am available to work from June until September. Should you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me at this number: +48 333 444 555.

Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to hearing from you in due course.

Yours sincerely,

Magdalena Krawczyk

Hi,
I've just spoken to Julie to find out about Laura's interview, and apparently it didn't go very well because she [1]___ hard and unexpected questions, not the type she [2]___ to answer like What are you keen on? etc. Instead she had to talk about what she would do if she was a certain animal, or something like that. Julie reckons that it's what companies do now to avoid [4]___ candidates who have the same answers to more conventional questions. They check [5]___ you can think and get to know you as a person more. Most big corporations include them while they [6]___. Well, Laura knew about it, and she just ignored the advice.

Bye for now,
Tracy

4 Healthy mind, healthy body

VOCABULARY addictions • eating disorders • health care system

1 Read the list of things people may get addicted to. Which addictions do you consider the most serious ones? Why?

- alcohol, drugs, cigarettes
- caffeine
- social media, online gaming, TV series
- gambling, shopping
- exercising, painkillers

2 Work in pairs and answer the questions.

1 What do people with the addictions mentioned above do? How does it affect their lives?
2 What may the consequences of these addictions be?
3 Where may these addictions stem from?

3 Read the forum thread and paraphrase the expressions in bold.

Maggie: I don't get it. Why do people want to waste their lives getting addicted to something? Drinking yourself stupid or drug abuse … What for? What a waste of life!

Kieran: People get hopelessly hooked on things for various reasons. Usually because of genetics or poor social support networks. Getting high gives them some relief, I guess.

Jake: Yeah, I agree. It's easier to develop addictions when you think there is no one you can talk to. That's why it is so important to take care of people you like or love. My mate got addicted to designer drugs while he was going through some difficult time. For him it was an easy way out. He didn't realise it was a damaging coping strategy. Me and my friends tried to support him in his choice to seek help and to show him that we will always be there for him.

Maggie: Jake, is your mate clean now?

Jake: Fortunately so. He came off drugs with the help of a therapist. He spent six months in a rehab centre. Some other people in the same centre didn't make it. They took an overdose …, so sad.

Kieran: How about people who show dependence on things like social media or TV series? I know a few people who love binge watching and some who are really glued to their screens, and get no sleep at all. And then there are social media addicts who stay up all night waiting for more 'likes' under their posts.

Maggie: I know someone who is a shopaholic. She steals money from her parents to feed her addiction. I think she just buys stuff to beat her depression. I would like to help her, but I don't know how … I didn't think shopping could be so addictive in fact. I think she also suffers from bulimia, but I'm not sure.

Jake: I think you should get in touch with a counsellor. Don't you have one at school? Eating disorders are very common now. We had a girl with anorexia at school. She did get help in the end. And her classmates stood up for her all the time.

Maggie: I'll try. Thanks.

This morning the police arrested a man who they said had caused a serious car accident. The police spokesperson revealed that the man had been driving in the city centre and had fallen asleep behind the wheel and then crashed into another vehicle. The police thought that the driver was under the influence of alcohol. However, it appeared that the man suffers from narcolepsy, a sleep disorder which may make the sufferer fall sleep at any time without realising it. The spokesperson confirmed that the man might be fined for causing the crash. The man himself admitted that he knew he shouldn't drive a car with his condition. The police told the man not to drive again or else he could cause a fatal accident.

A woman was found walking in her nightie in the street in the city centre. When she was stopped by the police, she said she didn't know where she was or why she was out alone. The police asked her if she had got lost, but the woman was unable to respond. She was taken to the nearest hospital to establish whether or not she was suffering from some mental condition. After the report was shown on TV this afternoon, the woman's husband came forward and stated that his wife is a sleepwalker and that she frequently leaves home in the middle of the night. The doctors told the man to seek medical help for his wife and lock the house properly for the night.

2〉 ANALYSE Read the reporting verb patterns in the table. Make sure you understand the meaning of the verbs. Use your dictionary if necessary.

verb + to do	decide, threaten, hope, agree, expect, promise, offer, refuse verb + sb + to do sth	advise, warn, invite, persuade, remind, ask, tell, order, instruct verb (+ preposition) + -ing	deny, insist on, suggest, admit, complain about, object to, mention verb (+ sb) + that	mention, hope, suggest, expect, promise sb, deny, admit, add, claim, agree, confirm, explain, assure sb, reply, state, warn

3〉 ANALYSE Look at the verb patterns in exercise 2 again. Which verbs may follow more than one pattern?

4〉 LANGUAGE IN CONTEXT Read a fragment of the reporter's notes from the interview with Dr Philips. Does it mention any information suggested by the headlines in exercise 1? What does it say?

First, I mentioned a recent report saying that over 200,000 teens aged 13–19 in the USA had undergone plastic surgery the previous year and added that experts said social media were to blame. I asked Dr Philips whether that was true and if so, why teens wanted to go through all that pain. She confirmed that it was true. She explained that teenagers looked at images of celebrities and other young people which had been photoshopped, and they wanted to look like that. Dr Philips mentioned that the most common procedures were to improve one's nose, ears, lips, chin, tummy and legs. She stated that those are serious surgeries and added that she kept telling all her patients that they shouldn't go for plastic surgeries. Next, she explained that those surgeries are too risky and often simply unnecessary.

5〉 CD 1.26 Read the text in exercise 4 again. Change reported speech into direct speech. Listen to the interview and check your answers.

Watch out!

Some verbs follow the following pattern

Verb + someone + preposition + -ing: congratulate sb on doing sth, apologise to sb for doing sth, blame sb for doing sth, thank sb for doing something

6〉 In your notebook, rewrite the following statements and commands using the verbs given.

1 'Don't go for plastic surgery. It's painful and may lead to a serious infection.' ADVISED / WARNED
2 'Don't forget about your appointment. I can take you there.' REMINDED / OFFERED
3 'I'll tell your parents about your addiction. Why don't you go to see a psychologist?' THREATENED / SUGGESTED
4 'Don't trust what you see online. Look at people around you. No-one is perfect.' INSTRUCTED / INVITED / ADDED
5 'I'm sorry I called you fat. It was horrible of me!' APOLOGISED / STATED

7〉 NOW YOU DO IT Work in pairs. Have a conversation based on one of the following questions. Write your conversation down. Then report it using reported speech.

1 What is 'body image'? Why do we pay so much attention to the way we look?
2 What could help teenagers worry less about their looks? How?
3 Do you blame social media for an increase in teens' dissatisfaction with their body image? Why? / Why not?

4 READING AND VOCABULARY

reading for gist and detail • emotional and mental well-being

1 Look at the photographs. Work in pairs and answer the questions.

1 Why are the people feeling like that? What may have happened to trigger such a reaction?
2 What do you think they are saying to themselves?
3 What may happen next? What would you do in such a situation?

2 Read the statements about stress. Work in pairs and decide if they are true or false. Check your answers on page 124.

1 All of these are stress hormones: dopamine, adrenaline and cortisol.	4 Symptoms of stress are mainly physical.
2 Adrenaline increases your heart rate.	5 Stress may affect our immune system.
3 Chronic stress may lead to obesity.	6 Humans need some stress to live well.

3 Read the two texts. Why do you think they were written?

IT SEEMS that everybody feels stressed these days, doesn't it? Apparently, more than half of adults are concerned about the levels of stress in their daily life, and I guess the same applies to young people who are still at school. Well, I'm certainly one of them. I find life very stressful, and it's beginning to take its toll on my mental and physical health. I can't get rid of the feeling of anxiety that's with me all the time, my body aches, and I often toss and turn in bed for no reason. As it's becoming unbearable, I've decided to seek help, which is what you do when you have a problem. Guess what I've found out … I am one of many individuals who have developed habits which increase stress … The doctor I talked to mentioned seven of them, and truth be told, I have them all. So, let me tell you about some of these bad habits, let them act as a warning, or at least, encouragement to make you think more about your mental and physical well-being now and in the future.

THE REASON WHY I suffer from insomnia is down to my excessive drinking of caffeinated beverages. I should have thought of that myself. Caffeine may also contribute to my moodiness and digestive problems. I was told to reduce the amount of such drinks to 400 mg per day, which is two cups of coffee.

ANOTHER EXPLANATION is apparently the fact that I see the negative in everything. 'You tend to dwell on problems and obsess over unnecessary details of your life,' the doctor said. People who are perfectionists, like me, are more likely to feel stressed out whenever things do not go according to plan or aren't perfect enough. I was advised to learn how to put things in perspective, treat mistakes as experiences I can learn from and focus on things I can change. Well, easier said than done.

LAST BUT NOT LEAST, it's my diet. When we feel under pressure, our bodies release cortisol which ramps up our appetite and we overeat. The more stressed one is, the more likely he or she is to eat unhealthy food which is rich in fat and sugars. It's a vicious circle. Anyway, the advice is to watch what you put on your plate and don't use food to deal with your negative emotions. So simple, heh?

1 We learn from the first paragraph that a everybody develops habits leading to stress.
b the author worries about his/her future life.
c most people who are stressed out look for professional help.
d the author finds stress very hard to handle.

2 Caffeine makes the author a feel tense.
b experience sleepless nights.
c suffer from stomachaches.
d feel angry.

3 How does the author feel about the advice given in the last two paragraphs?
- a The suggestions are quite useless.
- b Implementing the advice seems manageable.
- c The suggested options are impossible to act on.
- d The advice may be hard to put into practice.

Stress is the body's natural response to danger. It's what helped our ancestors survive. Short-term stress does not lead to any serious health issues, as opposed to long-term stress which may put your health at risk. Stress may cause a number of serious health concerns and, as far as I can tell, should be avoided or at least alleviated. How does it happen?

Stress starts in the hypothalamus in our brain. When we're stressed, the hypothalamus sends signals throughout our nervous system and then to our adrenal glands near the kidneys. As a result, they release stress hormones, including adrenaline and cortisol. Adrenaline, for example, may make you feel jittery. Your fingers may shake, and you may even feel dizzy.

Stress also increases our blood pressure which means you may feel very hot, and sweat. It may also trigger tension headaches, panic attacks, sleeplessness, acne breakouts and weight gain.

Therefore, what humans should learn is how to cope with anxiety so that they don't fall victim to chronic stress, which is a real health hazard leading to depression and even cancer. What can we do? Well, first and foremost, identify the causes of stress in your life, and learn to control them, do exercise and keep in touch with your family and friends. People in relationships are less prone to stress, and when they do feel tense, it's easier to overcome it, doctors confirm.

4 Which information from Text 2 is presented as an opinion, not a fact?
- a People who have partners tend to suffer from stress less.
- b People feeling stressed out often put on extra kilograms.
- c People must figure out what it is that makes them tense.
- d People ought to stay away from stressful situations.

5 From both texts we learn
- a what the physical symptoms of feeling stressed out are.
- b that stress affects our mental and physical health.
- c how your personality may lead to increased stress.
- d where to look for professional medical help to combat stress.

4 Read the texts again and choose the correct answers for questions 1–5.

5 Answer questions 1–5 using your own words.

1 Who do you think the authors of the texts are? Where may you see texts like these?
2 What physical and mental symptoms of stress are mentioned in the texts?
3 Why was the author of the first text advised to put things in perspective?
4 Why do you think stress helped our ancestors?
5 How does stress occur?

6 Work in pairs and prepare a visual mind map about stress. Include as many details as you can find in the texts in exercise 3. Use drawings and add extra information.

Na stronie internetowej znalazłeś/znalazłaś ogłoszenie dotyczące udziału w półmaratonie w Londynie. Napisz list z prośbą o podanie interesujących Cię szczegółów oraz z wyjaśnieniem, dlaczego chciałbyś/chciałabyś uczestniczyć w tym biegu.

Dear Sir/Madam,
I am writing in reference to your advertisement which I found on your webpage. I would like to enquire about participation in the London half-marathon next year.
I would be grateful if you would be so kind as to send me some more details.
Firstly, I would like to know what criteria you apply when selecting the participants for the event, and whether or not people who are minors, like myself, are allowed to enter the run. I also wonder what the cost of the application is and if it is possible to receive some funding.
I would also appreciate more information about the preparation you advise prospective runners should undergo before the event. Additionally, it would be useful to learn whether or not I am required to produce a valid medical certificate and if so, what it should include.
I would also be interested in obtaining information regarding accommodation in London. Could you possibly recommend a reliable booking service?
Let me assure you that taking part in a marathon in London has always been my dream. I have been taking part in half-marathons held in Poland for the last year, and I feel I am ready to represent my country abroad. While in London, I could additionally do some sightseeing and practise my English.
I would be grateful to receive more details as soon as possible. Thank you for your assistance in this matter.
Yours sincerely,
XYZ

Hi Lou,
How are you? I hope all's well at your end.
Remember when we were talking about adults and their love for cartoons and animated movies? I've just listened to two people talking about it on the radio. One of them sounded like some kind of an expert and confirmed that [1] ___ are becoming interested in these kind of shows and are even buying [2] ___ which have cartoon characters on them.
The guy explained that one of the reasons could be the fact that adults want [3] ___ their everyday lives and all the hardships. He also said that most of us can easily [4] ___ cartoon characters because their lives are the same as ours.
Have you heard the word kidult? Basically, it's when [5] ___ habits as kids. This kind of behaviour may also suggest that adults simply dream [6] ___, when they led a happy, care-free life.
It was really interesting and perhaps explains why my 35-year-old sister has just got herself three T-shirts with Disney cartoon characters. ☺
See you tomorrow!
Elisa

Energy drinks are usually advertised as products which boost your energy and improve your mental and physical performance. They are becoming more and more popular among young people. Statistics in the USA show that over 30% of teens between 12 and 17 drink them on a regular basis. While an energy drink from time to time does no harm, regular consumption may lead to all kinds of health concerns. The main problem with these drinks is the amount of caffeine they contain, which is far greater than in other drinks. The amount is usually more than double the amount found in other soft drinks.

Too much caffeine is addictive for a start, but also leads to headaches, poor sleep, heart problems, dehydration, digestive problems, or the so-called caffeine jitters – when you begin to feel anxious. All of these effects might interfere with concentration at school. Students become hyperactive, are easily distracted and their school results decrease. What's worse, high levels of sugar intake from energy drinks may cause obesity and tooth decay, which additionally increases health risks. As paediatricians underline, energy drinks have no nutritional value and there is no reason why both children and teenagers would need to use them.

Governments in some countries, like the UK, propose a ban on energy drinks to people under 16 to reduce health risks and obesity. It's probably a matter of time before most countries realise that some regulations are urgently needed.

1 What is the text about?
2 What's wrong with the amount of caffeine in energy drinks?
3 What do you learn from the article about health issues caused by energy drinks?
4 Why are teens' school results likely to decrease if they use energy drinks?
5 Why, according to the article, are some urgent solutions needed to deal with the problem of energy drinks?

While it is often assumed that everyone looks for the same traits in a good friend, it seems possible that not all friendships are based on these fundamental qualities. Studies have shown that the three [1] ___ basic personality traits that people look for fall under three headings: Integrity, Caring, and Congeniality. In [2] ___ words, we look for people we can trust, those who are sincerely concerned with our well-being and, in [3] ___ to that, people who are fun to be around. However, the trouble with this simplification of how friendship works is that less basic qualities can draw people [4] ___. While our very best friends are those who've earned our trust and affection, others can be an important part of our lives simply because they share a passion for a sport or other activity, have intriguing ideas about current topics, or are just good fun to [5] ___ time with. So what it comes down to is that we can have different types of friends for different [6] ___, and all of them deserve our gratitude for sharing their lives with us.

5 GRAMMAR

Comparatives and superlatives

1〉 Work in pairs and answer the questions.

1 Do you think going online is safer now than it used to be? Why?/Why not?

2 What problems can people cause for others online?

2〉 LANGUAGE IN CONTEXT Read the website comment. What are the advantages and disadvantages of communicating online?

THE WORST TYPE OF BULLY

Everyone knows that it is becoming more and more common for people to interact with each other online. The fastest broadband speeds ever are allowing us to get in touch online more easily than before, and more reliable signals make it less likely that our communication will be interrupted. People today are physically talking to friends less regularly than they used to. What is worse is that this has given the least honest among us the perfect opportunity to cheat, bully and break our social rules. Cyberbullying in particular is quickly becoming one of the worst problems. Hate mail can be sent to a person's entire social group. What is more, it can all be done anonymously, so these bullies behave much worse online than in the real world. Cyberbullying is harder to avoid and can hurt people more deeply than face-to-face bullying. The most seriously affected victims may even try to take their own lives.

3〉 ANALYSE Find examples of the following in the text in exercise 2.

1 a comparative adjective + -er

2 a superlative adjective + -est

3 a comparative adjective + more and/or less

4 a superlative adjective + most and/or least

5 an irregular comparative adjective

6 an irregular superlative adjective

4〉 In your notebook, match the highlighted examples in the text with the rules below.

1 We usually use more and (the) most with comparative and superlative adverbs.
You drive more carefully than Jim does. You drive (the) most carefully.

2 For a negative comparison we can use less and (the) least.
I eat less quickly than I used to. I eat (the) least quickly in my family.

3 Some adverbs have the same form as adjectives: fast, hard, late, early. Also, we can use better, best, worse, worst as adverbs.
She works very hard. She works harder than I do.
Mark sings worse than I do.

5〉 PRACTISE In your notebook, write the opposite comparative or superlative forms of the underlined words.

1 The online connection here is the best in this area.

2 Identity fraud is becoming more common today.

3 The most effective solution is to block unwanted mail.

4 This problem is most likely to affect older surfers.

5 The difficulty is more easily overcome than you imagine.

6 The most difficult response is to ignore bullies.

6〉 In your notebook, write sentences from the prompts. Use comparative or superlative forms.

1 expensive / software / is not always secure.

2 I finished the test / quickly / than the other students, so I went home early.

3 Coding is / easy / than you think!

4 Cyberbullies are / powerful / if you meet them face to face.

5 The documentary was about / fit / man in our area.

6 The person who sang / good / won the competition.

Tip

- We use as … as to say that two things or people are equal in some way.
  Jane is as tall as her sister.
  I don't work as quickly as my brother.
- We use adverbs of degree (a little, slightly, a bit, far, a lot, much) with comparative forms to make the difference between the two things bigger or smaller.
  I'm a little taller than my best friend.
  My mum is far more artistic than my dad.
- We often use the present perfect + ever with superlative forms.
  That comment was the nastiest I've ever seen online.

7〉 In your notebook, translate the Polish parts of the sentences into English.

1 The results arrived ___ (znacznie szybciej niż) we'd expected.

2 The test was ___ (o wiele trudniejszy niż) the teacher had warned.

3 Online bullies ___ (stają się coraz bardziej agresywni).

4 I speak English ___ (trochę lepiej niż) I speak German.

8〉 In your notebook, rewrite the sentences using the words given.

1 I'm more alert now than I was this morning! NOT
This morning I ___ now.

2 Penny is better than everyone else in the class at maths. THE

Mike I was wondering if you have seen the graffiti on the school wall. It's so awful, isn't it?
Susie Yeah. Someone must have done it late last night. It wasn't there when we finished the school play rehearsal at 9.30, was it?
Mike No, I don't think so. Do you know who did it?
Susie Not really, but everyone is saying that it's Mark Hammond from 3rd grade. He's done something like this before, hasn't he?
Susie Mark? No way. Stop spreading rumours about people when you have no evidence, will you?
Mike Sorry. I'd like to know who could have done something like this. People just don't think, do they?
Susie If only I knew. Let's go and ask the others, shall we? Maybe they have some idea who's behind it.
Mike OK. But beforehand, help with me my maths homework, will you?

3 ANALYSE Read the dialogue again. Read the sentences with question tags and choose the correct answer. Write them in your notebook. Sometimes both answers are correct.

1 A positive statement has a positive / negative tag.

STOP WAR

WE WANT:	WE DON'T WANT:
▪ [1] ___ to stop fighting	▪ wars to [4] ___ out
▪ countries at [2] ___ to make peace	▪ [5] ___ to explode
	▪ innocent [6] ___ to die
▪ all sides of any conflict to respect human [3] ___

'It is impossible for an Israeli and a Palestinian to fall in love,' says a Jewish woman I interview in Tel Aviv for my blog about 'forbidden love'. The tension between the nations is felt everywhere, and most young people say that the political, cultural and religious barriers are too hard for any lovers to overcome. It's hardly surprising. The two countries have been at war on and off since 1948 and the fighting has cost thousands of lives on both sides. Sadly, with little chance of finding a peaceful solution to this violent conflict, you are simply not supposed to make friends with your worst enemy, unless you are brave enough to break this rule.

Among those few are Jasmin Avissar, an Israeli Jew, and Osama Zatar, a Palestinian Muslim. I talk to the couple as Jasmin is packing her suitcase after making a heartbreaking decision to leave her homeland. The situation is the most difficult we've ever experienced. 'They did everything possible to make my life miserable and make me leave, and unfortunately they have succeeded,' she says about her government with tears in her eyes. 'Our marriage was a human thing. We just fell in love. The society around us has made it political,' she adds. Then she smiles a bit and says: 'We just want to be a normal couple … I don't want to have these huge, gigantic problems interfering in our marriage.'

When she says 'huge, gigantic problems', she means it. She describes how the couple first tried to live in Israel, but the Israeli authorities would not let Osama settle there for good as it is illegal for a Palestinian to live in Israel. Even when he was visiting Jasmin, they were afraid that he might get attacked by Israeli extremists just for being a Muslim. So, she says, they moved to the occupied West Bank, but there, their situation was just as bad. Osama was even accused of betraying his country, something which hit him the hardest. 'We were naive and thought we could win this fight but we can't. So we have to go abroad and start a new life.' He explains that the only people who support them are their families, and that the rest are just strangers. 'I feel like a refugee in my own country,' says Osama and ends our conversation.

I leave their flat thinking about the woman in the Tel Aviv café. I am sad but also relieved to say that she was not completely right. A love affair like this one may be possible. Jasmin and Osama certainly prove that love between people from different cultures can happen and last despite all the difficulties.

By Anna Smith

Hi everyone,

I heard on the news that some politicians want to introduce a compulsory exam called 'Life in the UK' in order to test young people's knowledge of citizenship and politics.

Firstly, I must admit that I find their proposal ridiculous. I'm opposed to the idea of forcing teenagers to focus on citizenship education and politics. There are many more useful things to study for their future careers than those.

Also, I'm not in favour of a written test that checks whether someone is or isn't a good citizen. Instead, politicians should encourage young people to participate in various community projects such as helping the elderly or collecting funds for charity.

What do you think about this idea? Why don't you post your comments below?

That's all for now.

Anna

From Matt1992

Hi Anna,

I've just read your post and I'd like to share my point of view.

I can understand your way of thinking, but I still believe that teenagers should know more about citizenship and politics so that they become more responsible citizens.

In my experience, most young people know very little about how their country is run or what they could do for their local community. I partly agree that a test may not be ideal, but, on the other hand, it's the quickest way of testing people's knowledge of a given subject.

However, I think you are right in saying that more charity projects for teenagers would teach young people citizenship better than any school lesson.

I wonder what the rest of you out there think. Whose point of view do you support? Let me know.

Matt

CUT OFF FROM THE HEART OF TOWN

What are the most pressing issues in your area? Well, the problem that really concerns me is the plan to cancel the bus line connecting the city centre with my district. As far as I can see it, this is not a change for the better.

First of all, it might be said that people can use cars to commute. However, in my opinion, local government should encourage public transport usage as this is more environmentally friendly. Additionally, not everybody can afford a car, so the cancellation of this bus line would make people dependent on other, indirect lines, and force them to change buses. Their commuting time would be prolonged, which might be inconvenient, especially for elderly citizens.

In my view, there are several possible solutions to this problem. Firstly, I would suggest reconsidering the organisation of the New Year's Eve party in front of the Town Hall. It is outrageous to spend this amount of money on entertainment, whereas it could be used for improving the daily comfort of city inhabitants. Secondly, I am of the opinion that the council should invest in eco-friendly buses, which would reduce fuel costs as well. Finally, I believe that the number of sports events organised by the council might be reduced in order to provide money to save the bus line.

Do you agree that these steps will improve the situation? I look forward to reading your comments.

These days individuals are becoming more aware of their [7]____ and are trying to use fewer [8]____ like oil and coal. 6 GRAMMAR

Third conditional

1 Work in pairs and discuss the questions.

1 What changes could you make to your life if you wanted to 'go green'?

2 What would you do if you saw a fire in a forest?

2 CD 2.10 LANGUAGE IN CONTEXT Read and listen to the interview with a firefighter after a wildfire in California and answer the questions.

1 Did the firefighters learn about the fire quickly?

2 Was the ground dry?

3 Did they use a new device?

Interviewer So, Brendan, is the fire out now?

Brendan Yes, almost. We're lucky. It could have been a lot worse. The fire might have spread much further if the wind had been in a different direction.

Interviewer Did you get an early warning of the fire?

Brendan Not really. It had already developed into quite a big fire when we got there. If we'd known about it earlier, we would have been able to put it out faster.

Interviewer Would it have started so quickly if the ground hadn't been so dry?

Brendan Oh no. If we'd had more rain over the last few months, it wouldn't have been so bad.

Interviewer I hear you used a new device that showed you how the fire was moving?

Brendan Yes, it was amazing. If we hadn't used it, we would have had a much harder job chasing the fire.

3 ANALYSE Copy and complete the table with the correct words. Check your answers with the dialogue in exercise 2.

Third conditional

Conditional sentences revision; mixed conditional sentences

1〉 LANGUAGE IN CONTEXT Read the texts. Who is an environmental investigator? What do you learn about working as an environmental investigator?

1 If you are interested in this line of work, you must weigh up its pros and cons. If I were you, I would also talk to someone who has been an environmental investigator for some time, as they will give you honest advice. For me, this job is all about protecting the environment and preventing species from becoming extinct as a result of trade. If you come with me one day, you'll be able to see for yourself.

2 I wouldn't have become an environmental investigator if my friend hadn't persuaded me to join him on one of his missions. He had been asked to do a background check on a company suspected of polluting a local river and was looking for an assistant. We bumped into each other just by chance in the shopping mall. If I hadn't gone shopping that day, I wouldn't be an investigator now.

3 Unless you tend to lose your cool easily, you can become an investigator. One feature that all good investigators have in common is the ability to remain cool, calm and collected in difficult situations. It's a job for you provided you are patient and don't mind waiting or watching someone for hours. If I wasn't like that, I wouldn't have survived in this job.

2〉 Read the texts again and decide which of the sentences in bold are examples of zero conditional, first conditional, second conditional, third conditional and mixed conditional sentences.

3〉 Work in pairs and answer the questions based on your analysis of the sentences in bold in exercise 2.

1 Which conditional sentences refer to universal truths? Which tenses are used in this type of conditional sentence?
2 Which conditional sentences refer to the future, present and past moments? How do we form these conditional sentences?
3 Which two conditional sentences can we mix? Which tenses are used in each case? How would you explain the rules for using them?
4 Which other words or expressions are used instead of if? Could you use as long as, provided / providing, on condition that instead of if in each of the conditional sentences in exercise 2?

4〉 PRACTISE In your notebook, write sentences using mixed conditionals. Use the following information.

1 Sarah never listens to her parents. She got into trouble with the police again.
2 Joe became a WWF volunteer two years ago. He is a volunteer programme coordinator now.
3 Tim is too unreliable. That's why he didn't get the job.
4 Alice studied hard to become a vet. She's a happy manager of a clinic now.

5〉 PRACTISE Complete the mini-dialogue with the correct forms of the verbs in brackets. Write the answers in your notebook.

A The police are saying that if the investigator [1]____ (not help) them, they [2]____ (find) the ivory smugglers.
B Good. If I [3]____ (work) as a police officer, I [4]____ (ask) investigators for help all the time. They have connections, different ways of getting to the bottom of things.
A Yes, I agree.

6〉 Read the mini-dialogue again and decide where you could replace if with other expressions introducing conditional sentences.

» Grammar challenge! Unit 6, page 112, exercises 1 and 2

Watch out!

It's possible to use continuous tenses in conditional sentences and modal verbs instead of will and would.

If you are planning to become an investigator, you may need to seek some professional advice.

If you hadn't been driving so fast, you could have avoided the accident.

If you weren't doing these exercises, what might you be doing right now?

7〉 PRACTISE Translate the sentences into English.

1 Gdybyś mógł pracować z jakimś znanym biologiem, kogo byś wybrał?
2 Jeżeli planujesz oglądać jakiś serial, mógłbyś obejrzeć The Blue Planet.
3 Jeżeli nie będziesz używał laptopa, mogę z niego skorzystać?

8〉 NOW YOU DO IT Write three questions for each of the beginnings given. Then use the questions to interview your partner.

1 What will you do if ____?
2 What would you do if ____?
3 What would you have done if ____?

1 ___ park
2 ___ hunter
3 ___ act
4 ___ ban
5 ___ experts
6 ___ species
7 ___ habitat

2 A lot of animals die after their ___ is destroyed by humans.
3 ___ are prepared to pay a lot of money to be able to hunt down a particular animal. The problem is that they are not often punished for their ___.
4 Luckily, there is a ___ on hunting in all ___. Animals can live safely there.

A

Until 2015 Cecil the Lion had lived the life of a star in Zimbabwe's Hwange National Park. He was something of a mascot for the park, loved for his tame nature and his unusual black mane. The lion was believed to be safe in the park where hunting is forbidden. So, when his celebrity life came to a brutal end, it shocked everyone. It turned out that an American dentist and trophy hunter had paid 50,000 dollars to have the chance to kill the lion. The hunter wounded Cecil with an arrow, followed him for forty hours and watched his agony before killing him. The man's cruel act was widely criticised and made people demand a total ban on hunting to protect endangered species such as African lions.

C

When Lonesome George died unexpectedly, aged 100, the world's animal conservation experts reacted very emotionally. They knew that another species had become extinct despite all their efforts to help it survive. The species would not have become endangered if people had not hunted these animals down for meat and tortoise oil. Goats were also introduced to the island, which led to the loss of the tortoise natural habitat and their eventual extinction. How Lonesome George managed to survive is unknown, but when he was discovered in 1971, he was fit and scientists believed his species could still reproduce with other tortoise species. Sadly, it did not happen and the only place where you can see him now is Symbol of Hope Exhibition Hall in Puerto Ayora, Santa Cruz, where his stuffed body is on display.

Cecil the Lion

Sudan was the only male northern white rhino left living in his natural habitat on our planet, and his species depended on him for survival. He lived with his four armed guards in Ol Pejeta Conservancy in Kenya to stop hunters and poachers from getting to him. He was fitted with radio transmitters for safety reasons and he had his horn removed to make him 'less attractive' to trophy hunters. All this effort was made in the hope that, despite his old age, Sudan would be able to mate with a female and save his species from extinction. Unfortunately, he died and with him died the whole hope of rescuing his species. If we humans were more responsible, he wouldn't have been the only white rhino left on Earth in the first place …

WRITING
a letter to the editor

1 Work in pairs. How many of these signs do you recognise? What ideas do they represent?

2 Read the writing task below. How many paragraphs would you include in the letter? What information would you include in each paragraph?

Niedawno przeczytałeś/przeczytałaś artykuł mówiący o tym, że młodzież nie ma świadomości ekologicznej. Napisz list (200–250 wyrazów) do redakcji lokalnej gazety, w którym zgodzisz się z opinią autora. Wyjaśnij, z czego wynika taka sytuacja oraz zaproponuj, w jaki sposób można zachęcić młodzież do bardziej ekologicznego trybu życia.

3 Read the example letter below. Decide which of the missing paragraphs (A or B) should go in the letter. Why is the other paragraph unsuitable?

Dear Sir/Madam,

① I am writing in response to the article about the problem of young people not being 'green' enough. I fully support this opinion, and I would like to share my point of view on this matter.

② ___

③ Therefore, if we want to improve the situation, certain steps must be taken. First of all, imagine if all the parents made their lifestyles more ecological and involved their children in those changes. Then, it might be useful to organise workshops at schools during which the students would learn about ecological issues. Finally, what if teenage TV channels and social networking sites made more effort to 'sell' an ecological attitude rather than show hundreds of adverts? Would this not make young people reflect?

④ To conclude, I am convinced that if adults stressed the importance of being eco-friendly more and set a good example, young people would feel inspired. After all, the best way to learn is by example.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Yours faithfully,

XYZ

A Young people have no idea what it means to be environmentally friendly. They drop litter everywhere, buy bottled water, and use too much energy by constantly plugging in their smart devices or watching TV. In addition, they have no idea what can and cannot be recycled. Many young people have never heard of such problems as climate change or the protection of endangered species. The situation is truly hopeless.

B Firstly, I believe this situation may have to do with the way they are brought up at home. Many grown-ups are poor role models themselves. Every day they drive to work, carry plastic bags or overuse energy. Additionally, the problem could be connected with the fact that young people do not receive proper ecological education at school as teachers have little time to discuss green issues. This situation may also result from the fact that the media and social networking sites hardly ever promote pro-environmental attitudes.

4 In your notebook, complete the phrases with the missing words. Check your answers with the letter in exercise 3. Then translate the phrases into Polish.

▶ Hypothesising

I believe this may have to [1] ___ with …
The problem could/may be [2] ___ with the fact that …

If adults stressed the importance of …, more young people would … | Imagine if all the parents [4] ___ their lifestyles more ecological.

5 Read the statements below. Make hypotheses about the possible causes of the problems described, using the prompts to help you. Write the answers in your notebook.

1 People buy a lot of old environmentally unfriendly cars.
lower price • be not aware of the pollution these cars may cause • allowed by law
I believe that this may have to do with the lower price of these cars. Secondly, …

2 We produce more and more rubbish.
do not recycle • throw away things that could still be used • be not aware of environmental issues

3 The Earth's climate is changing.
global warming caused by greenhouse gases • overconsumption of energy • cut down tropical forests

6 Work in pairs. Brainstorm ideas about the causes of the problem below and possible solutions. Then write a short paragraph to include in a formal letter.

Problem: Few young people take part in ecological campaigns.
Causes: ___ Solution: ___

7 Read the instructions and do the writing task.

However, because of its rarity, and its own biology, Rafflesia is now an [1]___ (danger) species, first of all because its [2]___ (nature) habitat is decreasing. 1 CD 2.13 Read and listen to two students (A, B) doing the speaking task. Then answer questions 1–5.

Wraz z kolegami i koleżankami z klasy organizujecie kampanię mającą na celu zachęcenie młodzieży do udziału w charytatywnej akcji czyszczenia plaży. W kampanii tej wykorzystasz jedno z dwóch przedstawionych zdjęć.
- Wybierz to zdjęcie, które wydaje Ci się bardziej odpowiednie, i uzasadnij swój wybór.
- Wyjaśnij, dlaczego odrzucasz jedno ze zdjęć.

A The first picture shows children playing on a dirty, littered beach whereas the other shows a group of people picking the litter up. In my opinion, the picture with the teenagers in it would be more appropriate for the campaign because young people can identify with the volunteers in the picture. It shows enthusiasm and a friendly atmosphere between the people while doing an important job. Although the first picture shows the problem itself more clearly, I don't think it would appeal to volunteers because it doesn't show the good work that they can do.

B The two pictures are good to show how many rubbish is on our beaches. It is really terrible. One picture show childrens on dirty beach. In other picture people are cleaning the beach. I think picture two is better. Litter is dangerous for children. People must not to throw things on the beach.

Which student (A, B):
1 has understood the situation described in the task?
2 has chosen one picture and explained reasons for choosing?
3 has explained why he/she rejects the second picture?
4 has made grammatical mistakes?
5 has used a good range of vocabulary and structures?

2 Work in pairs. Find and correct the grammatical mistakes in student B's answer in exercise 1. What can you say to improve the answer?

3 Work in pairs and discuss the questions. Use the prompts to help you.

1 Is littering dangerous for the environment? Why?
animals / people / toxic chemicals • ugly / smelly 2 Do you agree that most young people are not concerned about ecological issues? Why?/Why not?
boring • too busy • can't do anything

Fran's Fresh Fish

If you love traditional fish and chips, try this place! The fish is never overdone and the chips are crisp, not soggy. I love fried food of all kinds, but theirs is truly mouth-watering!

Heavenly Bakery

I've tried both savoury and sweet baked goods here, but I'd only recommend a few things. Their muffins are delicious and the apple pie is scrumptious, but avoid the cakes. The ones I tried were dry, sickly-sweet and disgusting. On the savoury side, the cheesy bagels are delectable.

Luck Now

Good steamed dumplings are rare, but here they are definitely moreish – tender and moist, with a great spicy filling. I couldn't stop eating them! Surprisingly, they also do succulent grilled fish, cooked over a fire with very hot red pepper sauce. There is nothing bland here.

Melody Pub

I like a traditional pub lunch on a Sunday, but NOT when it's badly cooked. This pub has a beautiful interior, but the food is truly revolting. The roast beef was as tough as shoe leather and doused in lumpy, nasty gravy. The boiled vegetables were a wet, smelly mess. Stick to the drinks.

3 Copy and complete the table with the highlighted food adjectives from the text in exercise 2. Some words may fit into more than one category.

Taste		Negative opinion
Texture		Method of cooking
Positive opinion

4 In your notebook, complete the sentences with the words from exercise 3.

4 If you steam vegetables for a short time, they are c___ and taste very fresh, but if you boil them for a long time, they get o___ and simply feel s___.
5 Considering how much I paid for this steak, I expected it to be t___, but instead it was so t___ that I could barely chew it. I told the waiter that it was d___ and made him take it back to the kitchen.
6 My mum's biscuits not only look truly d___, they taste great as well. In fact, the best word to describe them is m___. Once you start, you can't stop eating them!

2 What problem is being discussed?
a the high price of food
b lack of food in developing countries
c lack of food in wealthy countries
d inadequate help for well-off families
3 Which of the following pieces of information is stated first?
a getting food for free
b the disproportion between rich and poor families c cooperation between community members
d children not having any breakfast before school

8 CD 2.16 Listen again. Find and correct eight factual mistakes in the summary. Write the answers in your notebook.

Most people believe that hunger only exists in poorer countries, but actually close to one in four children in richer countries has too little to eat. Another fact is that many families get help from government food programmes, but still fail to meet the food needs of their families. It is shocking that one wealthier couple can spend a hundred dollars on a restaurant meal, but poor families have the same amount to spend on food for a week. The situation is likely to become more serious because food prices and the number of people are going down.

9 WHAT DO YOU THINK? Work in pairs and discuss the questions.

1 Do you know how to cook? If so, what kinds of foods do you enjoy cooking? Who do you cook for?
2 Is hunger a problem where you live? What do you think are the possible solutions to food insecurity in your country?

Quality Cooking

by Annette Campbell

I had been looking forward to my first visit to New York for months. My American friend, Debbie, had promised to take me on a trip round the Big Apple's most exclusive restaurants. As a foodie, I thrive on new culinary experiences, and she knows it. On my arrival, Debbie gave me a list of the restaurants and their set menus. The first place was called the Salvage Supperclub. Although the name sounded a bit odd, the three-course meal sounded mouth-watering: tomato gazpacho served with French bread crostini, roast duck breasts and cheesecake with raspberry sauce. Judging by this gourmet choice, I expected a posh establishment. However, when we reached our destination, I was in for a big surprise. The place was a converted dumpster, and full of my friend's friends.

When my initial shock was over, I was told that the place was a freegan restaurant, and all the food there had been salvaged from the supermarkets bins. It turned out that all Debbie's friends there were freegans, or dumpster divers, who instead of buying food from the stores saved it from their bins. I had come across articles about people like them before, but I certainly didn't think you could make a feast like this from the food you found. It was a huge eye-opener.

Naturally, I was curious to learn more, so the moment we finished eating, I turned to my friend's friends for more answers. Without exception, all said that once they'd found out about the scale of food waste in the USA, they'd decided to take some action. They did not consider themselves particularly responsible for the problem, but felt that something had to be done. Tom, Debbie's best friend, added 'You know, we bin between 30 and 50% of our food, which makes you think. However, when you realise that most of the wasted food is still packaged, and even before its sell-by date, it truly angers you. That's why I joined the group.' Another friend, Cloe, confessed to getting inspired by Rob Greenfield, America's well-known ecologist and activist who, for a month, ate only out of store dumpsters. Cloe told me all about his Food Waste Fiasco action, in which all the perfectly edible food he found in the bins was displayed in one place and photographed. She quickly found one of the photos online to prove her point.

Then came the story of Larry, who seemed to be the most radical of all. 'The first time I went dumpster diving, I couldn't believe my eyes when I saw all the waste.' Larry sounded concerned about the situation around the world too. 'This is a universal problem which we need to address. So much food goes off needlessly. Everyone will have to learn how to buy less of it. Excess food should be donated to food banks, while celebrity chefs should encourage people to use up leftovers, and there should be penalties for anyone whose bin contains any wasted food.'

Larry's words struck a chord with everyone. They all nodded in agreement and said that not enough was being done to promote what they call a 'zero waste policy.' I couldn't help but agree. 'Back in Britain, we are not much better,' I told everyone. 'Actually, we are the most wasteful country in Europe when it comes to food. France, though, is better,' I added. 'They've made it illegal for supermarkets to dispose of edible food in such a way.' This came as little consolation, as the overall feeling was that the majority of Western cultures do not respect food.

Then, to change everyone's mood, Debbie said, 'Don't you think we are doing our bit to improve the world? I do. Look,' she said, 'twenty of us feasted on what I consider a scrumptious and nutritious meal.' This brought smiles back to everyone's faces, and mine too. I was most grateful to my friend for making me part of this experience. It was both food for my stomach and food for thought.

3 Which of the following reasons was given by all Debbie's friends for becoming freegans?
   a They were inspired by other people to become freegans.
   b They felt furious about wasting food.

2 How many different arguments for and against are there? What are they?
3 What does the author say in the conclusion?

Jedzenie poza domem stało się częścią naszego codziennego życia. Napisz rozprawkę, w której przedstawisz wady i zalety spożywania posiłków poza domem.

Our eating habits have recently undergone a significant transformation. Fewer and fewer people are preparing meals at home, choosing to eat out instead. Although some people feel this is a positive change, others argue that it has considerable drawbacks.

The main advantage of eating out is convenience. It cannot be denied that dining out means not having to do any shopping, cooking or washing-up. The idea appeals to busy people, who struggle to find the time to prepare meals at home. Another argument in favour of this is that a meal at a restaurant allows people to sample new cuisines and, thus, enrich their diets. Restaurant customers learn about new types of foods and methods of cooking, which they can later use when preparing meals at home.

The major disadvantage of eating at restaurants is the fact that meals do not always meet the necessary sanitary standards, which may lead to problems such as indigestion. Additionally, the food served in fast food outlets often contains too much salt or fat. Those against the idea often add that eating out is more expensive than cooking dinner at home. Moreover, you also probably leave a tip, which raises the cost of your meal significantly.

All things considered, although there are many benefits of eating out, there are also some drawbacks involved. While a meal out means less work and more flavour, it may not always be an economical or healthy option. Personally, I prefer home-made food to restaurant meals for economic reasons.

Tip

Przeczytaj dokładnie obydwa teksty angielskie. Ustal, jaka jest ich główna myśl. Postaraj się streścić obydwa teksty po polsku. Przeczytaj dokładnie tekst, który należy uzupełnić, i ustal, z którego tekstu pochodzą brakujące informacje.

1 Read the two texts and answer the questions.

1 What is each of the texts about?
2 Do the texts mention any similar issues?
3 How would you summarise the texts in Polish?

A Are you a foodie? If so, this adventure is definitely for you! Our food tour will give you an opportunity to taste scrumptious Spanish dishes and get to know the stories behind them. You'll also learn how to prepare the most traditional meals. The package involves paying a visit to four different establishments which specialise in regional cuisines. All the restaurants we visit participate in food sharing programmes as part of their corporate social responsibility (CSR) policies.

B What do you think of these food sharing sites and apps which allow people to pass on edible food to people in need? I stick to the zero waste philosophy in my life, and I believe that sharing what you can't consume yourself is a sign of solidarity between people, some form of altruism. It's so much better to give away the food you don't eat than to bin it, isn't it? People share mainly with their neighbours to avoid criss-crossing the town so it's really good for neighbourly relations. What's your view?

2 Read the email. Decide where in the texts you can find the information to complete the gaps.

Cześć Łukasz!
Co u Ciebie? Wczoraj przeczytałem dwa teksty, które mogą Cię zainteresować. Pierwszy to [1] ___ w wycieczce, której uczestnicy mogą zarówno [2] ___ różnych potraw regionalnych, jak i [3] ___ je przyrządzić. Organizator zapewnia, że uczestnicy dowiedzą się również czegoś o [4] ___ tych potraw. Co ciekawe, restauracje, które odwiedzą uczestnicy, realizują [5] ___, dzieląc się jedzeniem z ludźmi w potrzebie. Drugi tekst znalazłem na forum. Jego autor, tak jak Ty, jest przeciwny [6] ___. Uważa, że dzielenie się jedzeniem wspiera [7] ___. Może coś Ci się z tego przyda?
Pozdrawiam,
Mariusz

Tip

Zdecyduj, czy lukę w tekście należy uzupełnić jednym wyrazem czy może dłuższym fragmentem tekstu. Pamiętaj, że tekst musi być leksykalnie i gramatycznie poprawny.

3 Complete the gaps in exercise 2. Write the answers in your notebook. Do you need one or more words?

4 Read the sentences in English and complete the sentences in Polish so that the meaning is the same. Write the answers in your notebook.

1 It goes without saying that everybody should give away food they do not eat up. Dzielenie się jedzeniem ___.
2 Kate works for a charity organisation which collects food for those in need. Kasia pracuje ___.
3 Without the help of hundreds of volunteers we wouldn't have managed to distribute all the food. Dystrybucja żywności byłaby ___.
4 It is very noble of restaurants and supermarkets to share food with charities. ___, że dzielą się jedzeniem z organizacjami charytatywnymi.

5 Read the text and complete the message in your notebook.

I'm so glad people have finally realised that wasting food is wrong. As a modern society, we have grown up enough to stop being wasteful. I am really in favour of food sharing programmes – not only for those in need, but also simply among people who live close by. Why throw away half of a perfectly edible pizza if you can share it with your neighbours?

3〉 CD 2.25 In your notebook, complete the dialogue in exercise 2 with the correct passive forms. Then listen and check your answers.

4〉 ANALYSE In your notebook, complete the rules for forming the passive.

The passive is formed with a the verb ___ in the correct tense + past participle.
b a ___ verb (e.g. can / will / may) + be + past participle.

5〉 Which of the statements below is incorrect?

We use the passive a when the action is more important than the person who performs the action.
b to focus attention on the person or thing affected by the action.
c to make one action stand out from the other actions.
d when the agent of the action is obvious, unimportant or unknown.

Tip

- We use by with the passive to say who or what performed the action we are talking about.
  It was given to me by my brother.
- We use with with the passive to name the tool or method used to do something.
  The box was opened with a knife.
- When we use verbs that always take a preposition, the preposition stays with the verb in the passive sentence.
  Someone must look into this problem.
  This problem must be looked into*.* (Not: ~~This problem must be looked.~~)

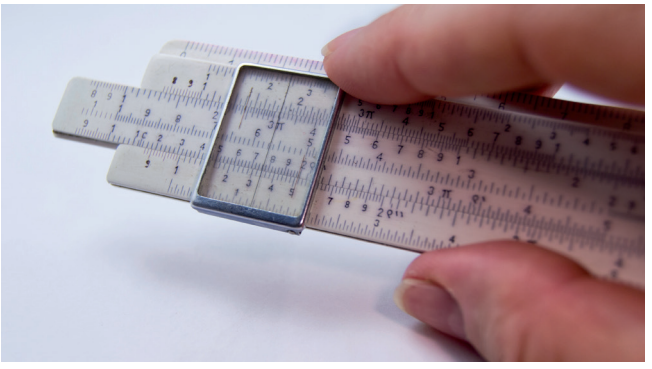
6〉 PRACTISE In your notebook, write sentences in the passive from the prompts. If possible, use with or by to say who an action was done by or what it was done with.

1 a new computer lab / set up / at our school right now.
2 the volume on this device / cannot turn down / the user.
3 tickets / should pay for / a debit or credit card.
4 the plumbers started repairing the pipe after the water / turn off.
5 video cassettes / produce at this factory / before it closed.
6 my hairdryer / break / my brother / when he dropped it on the floor yesterday.
7 the door / can unlock / two turns of the key.

7〉 Decide if the underlined parts of the text can be rewritten in the passive. Rewrite the relevant parts in your notebook



Before [1]companies introduced electronic calculators to the general public in the 1960s, the best way to do complex mathematical calculations was with a slide rule. A slide rule is a device [2]which does not use power of any kind. Instead, [3]users can slide the parts back and forth to match up the columns of numbers so that [4]they can carry out certain kinds of calculations. Slide rules [5]turned out to be extremely useful for many problem-solving tasks. Of course [6]the introduction of electronic calculators made difficult calculations much easier, so not many [7]students have learnt how to use a slide rule in the past few decades. But if you have the chance, I highly recommend that you try one.

Impersonal constructions with passive voice

1〉 CD 2.26 LANGUAGE IN CONTEXT Read and listen to the story. How did Leyland Smart's life change? Why?

Leyland Smart, now 26 years old, is believed to have been one of the cleverest and most infamous computer hackers of all time. Smart is said to have broken into at least 10,000 computer systems in his short career, and people assume he would still be hacking today if not for a surprising occurrence. At the age of 19, he broke into a crowd sourcing account, hoping to take all of the money from it. But, instead of going directly into the account, he stopped and read about the cause the money was being collected for. It was the story of a young boy who had become seriously ill at the age of eight. Evidently, Smart suddenly stopped and asked himself what he was doing and why. It was assumed that he was happy with his crime-fuelled lifestyle, but actually that wasn't the case. At the age of 20, Smart turned himself in to the police, who charged him with numerous counts of theft and computer crime. It is said that Smart is now a completely reformed character, and currently he works for the government in their cybercrimes division.

2〉 ANALYSE Copy and complete the table with the examples from the article. Then answer the questions (a–c).

Active	Impersonal passive 1 (It + passive + that clause)	Impersonal passive 2
People say that Smart is now a completely reformed character.	1	Smart is said to be now a completely reformed character.

3 It wasn't until the 19th century that scientists ___.
4 Phrenology led to spreading prejudice after it was claimed that the look of your skull enabled experts ___.
5 The experiment with cold fusion resulted in scientists ___ practice.

Scientists are said to be motivated by the desire to make sense of the world around us and to find new solutions to existing problems. Scientific activity usually involves problem-solving. Typically, a hypothesis is put forward, tested in numerous experiments and finally accepted or rejected based on the analysis of the results. Research is often a process of trial and error, which means that scientists may make mistakes, just like everyone else, and that scientific theories should not always be taken for granted. As a matter of fact, no field of science has been free from misconceptions. The history of science is full of false theories that were eventually discredited.

An example of a questionable medical practice that was promoted by doctors as a cure for almost every disease is bloodletting, that is, the withdrawal of blood from a patient. The practice was based on the ancient theory of the four humours, advanced by the Greek physician, Hippocrates (460–370 BC), which stated that the four basic elements: earth, air, fire and water were related to the four basic human humours: blood, phlegm, black bile and yellow bile. Each humour was associated with a particular organ in the human body, so if someone was ill, the doctors widely believed that it was due to an imbalance of the four humours. Therefore, removing some amount of one of the humours, like blood, was thought to help the sick. The theory became a widely applied medical practice and was popular until the beginning of the 20th century. The treatment, however, often led to the patient's death. One of the most famous victims was George Washington, whose fever and breathing problems were treated this way. He died as a result. The idea that bloodletting was beneficial to the patient was finally disproved in the second half of the 1800s, after scientists invented statistical methods for evaluating the effectiveness of medical procedures.

Another problematic scientific theory, which gained popularity among neurologists and common people in the 18th and 19th centuries, was phrenology. Phrenologists claimed that a person's mental functions, character traits and talents were linked to different areas of the brain, and could be felt as 'bumps' on the skull. The theory was developed by Franz Joseph Gall, an Austrian doctor, who maintained that the larger a particular brain area was, the more likely the person was to have certain qualities. For example, if an individual had a particularly big bump on their skull in the area for, say, colours, this person was assumed to have a gift for painting. Gall arrived at his conclusions through research which he primarily carried out on the skulls of a narrow group of people: his friends, gifted people, criminals and mental patients. Sadly, the principles of his theory were also used to discriminate against people. It was assumed, for example, that the shape of the skull made it possible to determine which race or sex was superior. Luckily, the theory was eventually completely discredited by scientific research.

And finally, more recently, in 1989, the world of science was electrified by the news that a nuclear reaction had been produced at room temperature. Nuclear fusion, which normally occurs inside stars, is a process in which two light atoms join together, or fuse, into a single heavier atom, releasing a lot of energy in the process. Two American electrochemists, Martin Fleischmann and Stanley Pons, boldly claimed that they had achieved cold fusion in an experiment where an electric current was run through a solution of palladium chloride and sea water to generate some neutrons. The experiment was considered to be a major breakthrough in science as cold fusion could potentially produce unlimited amounts of clean and cheap energy. Unfortunately, the enthusiasm disappeared when other scientists tried to repeat the experiment and failed to obtain similar results. This naturally led to accusations that Fleischmann and Pons had falsified the results of their research. It also spawned a debate on good and bad scientific practice. Despite the setback, however, scientists across the world continue researching cold fusion in the hope that one day they will make a historic discovery.

6 Work in pairs and answer the questions.

1 Have you heard of any of the theories described in the text? Which seems the most interesting to you? Why?

WRITING a letter of complaint

1 Have you or someone you know experienced any of the problems below? What exactly happened? How was the problem solved?

defective / faulty / damaged goods cold calling unsatisfactory customer service shoddy workmanship malfunctioning equipment slow wi-fi connection inefficient technical support inadequate facilities no internet access / broadband

2 Read the writing task and the example letter of complaint below. What is the problem? What action does the author think should be taken to solve it?

Od dłuższego czasu masz w domu problem z dostępem do internetu, a liczne skargi telefoniczne do operatora nie przyniosły skutku. Napisz do dostawcy usług list z zażaleniem, w którym przedstawisz problem i napiszesz, jakich działań oczekujesz.

Dear Sir / Madam,

I am writing to complain about the internet connection your company provides as part of my contract for telecommunications services.

I am quite dissatisfied with the internet service, which falls short of our expectations. Although it is currently being advertised as the fastest in the country, this has not been our experience. We not only regularly experience interruptions to the service, but also often have no access to the Internet at all. Owing to this problem, I am unable to set up a reliable wi-fi network at home and members of my family cannot count on doing their work online. Consequently, not only are we unable to fully profit from a service we are paying for, but also our work-life balance is deteriorating.

What makes matters worse is that despite my repeated calls to your helpline, my complaint has not been dealt with properly. The assistants I spoke with were rude, and refused to treat my problem seriously.

I expect to see this problem solved as soon as possible. First of all, I would appreciate it if a technician from your company would contact me immediately in order to establish the source of the poor connection. Secondly, I believe that due to this inconvenience, the payments I have made since signing the contract should either be refunded or credited towards my future bills.

I would be most thankful for your support in resolving this urgent issue.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Yours faithfully,

Lucas Evans

Plastic is not so fantastic anymore. In the past it was considered the wonder material – cheap and versatile. However, no one could have predicted that it would take over our planet. [1] ___ Since then, its amount has only increased, leading to very serious environmental problems for planet Earth, its citizens and the natural world.

Most of the plastic that people use is single-use and consists of water bottles, plastic wraps and containers which are used by supermarkets to sell food in. It's also all the kinds of containers that we use in our kitchens like lunch boxes or barbecue dishes, cling foil or simply plastic carrier bags. And all of this is plastic that the planet simply cannot digest. [2] ___ As if that wasn't enough, plastic that interacts with food and the micro plastic which gets into water system are believed to cause health problems for humans too. Scientists say that the chemical that is found in plastic containers called BPA can be found in our blood, urine and even breast milk. It's toxic. As simple as that.

It's high time people gave up plastic and got to use glass, wooden or metal containers instead. In some countries, supermarkets are looking into more eco-friendly options such as asking shoppers to bring their own jars, bottles, or boxes to transport food home. Other initiatives come from businesses themselves. [3] ___ Food wraps can be made, for instance, from cotton soaked in beeswax. Such wraps can be reused and are fully recyclable.

Some people believe that it's the governments which need to take tough action and simply ban plastics altogether; others advocate that everyone should start with their own homes and implement a zero-waste philosophy of life. [4] ___ Don't buy any plastics, refuse plastic straws in bars and restaurants, stop buying disposable utensils for you barbecue, carry you own shopping bags. Don't wait for the authorities to act. Act yourself!

A Companies are growing more and more aware and concerned with the waste that is produced and coming up with technologies to cut down on plastic in the first place.

B What's more, the majority of these plastic containers are binned as soon as we get home and take our food out of them. They then end up dumped at landfills or in waterways, polluting the environment and killing hundreds of animals.

C Although humans are trying to make a lot of effort, most of it is in vain because what they think gets recycled has just been disposed of. Why would anyone want to recycle then?

D It may appear to be a daunting challenge, but only on the surface. In fact, it's pretty doable.

E Astonishingly enough, between 2002 and 2012, for example, we manufactured more plastic than people did in the entire 20th century.

Watch out!

Indefinite pronouns can be used as the subject of the sentence.

Indefinite pronouns in the singular are: anybody, anyone, anything, each, either, everybody, everyone, everything, neither, nobody, none, no one, somebody, someone, something.

Indefinite pronouns in the plural are: both, few, many, others, all, any, most, some.

No one in my class knew much about copyright issues. Only Mark and Julia had heard of them before, but neither knew too much.

People are divided when it comes to ACTA 2. Some are against, others are in favour.

Have you ever written a story, song lyrics, created a work of art or composed a piece of music or taken some photographs? If that's the case, you have created intellectual property – which is anything that comes out of your head. Many people do not mind sharing such content with other people. However, others who make a living as content creators would appreciate getting some acknowledgement for their work (and in some cases royalties) for their creation.

To protect content creators, governments have had to implement copyright laws to prevent people from copying the material for free and without giving any credit. Money isn't always the issue, as what a lot of content developers want is recognition and their name being visible. The problem is that Internet users don't always adhere to these laws, some break it deliberately and others are not even aware of the problem. How many times have you used a photograph, a quotation, a piece of music in your school presentation without even acknowledging the author – not to mention not paying for using the content? Do you copy and paste stuff from the Internet without much concern for who wrote it?

Questions like these should become part of any school's education, experts claim, and add that, sooner or later, it won't be so easy to obtain content for nothing. Governments across the world will have to curb Internet piracy whether people approve or disapprove of it. The EU introduced its ACTA 2 (The EU Copyright Directive) despite protests from European citizens and is determined to protect the rights of the content creators from artists and researchers to journalists and media. If you want to use the content – pay, don't share what isn't yours, they say!

It's hard for young people to understand why copying things should be made illegal. They view piracy as socially acceptable because it seems impersonal. The content is not theirs and therefore everybody can use it. According to some experts, what should happen is schools ought to teach about copyright issues by putting a human face on the problem. Imagine your tutor asks you to design something for which you work hard on. He then informs you that it will be exhibited but you can't put your name next to it. Alternatively, your class is asked to make video tutorials about e.g. how to study effectively and that these could then be sold as a package to younger students for a profit. But then your teacher uploads the tutorials on the school's website and makes them available for free. What would your reaction be?

No one can tell how the situation will develop, but copying and pasting stuff may not be so easy in the future. How do you feel about it? Are you concerned with copyright issues at all?

5〉 Translate the fragments in brackets into English. Write the answers in your notebook.

1 ___ (Ktoś zapytał) us about copyright issues in Poland. ___ (Niewielu) knew what to say.

6〉 PROJECT TASK: CLASS SURVEY Work in groups of three and design a class survey to find out about your classmates' awareness of copyright issues and their attitude to the problem. Prepare five questions. Interview the others. Take notes, and present the results.

Tekst 1.

Food trucks have been around for some time now, and I think they are becoming more and more popular. Vendors go to great lengths to cook up delicious meals, not only traditional ones but also gourmet burgers or even fusion food.
The owners of restaurants on wheels love serving food, and that's one of the reasons why food trucks have proven such a hit among people across the world. I love food truck festivals the most, where you can sample foods from various cuisines. It is an unbeatable dining experience and a wonderfully spent time, especially if you go with your family or friends. Many food trucks also donate food to the needy, which is even greater!

Tekst 2.

As part of my business, I run a food truck in Łódź. We offer simple food and focus on families with young children, who really love us. It might be said that we are currently thriving. But the beginning was not so easy. We lacked both people and money. And then, one day, a homeless man started appearing. He would come to our van and ask for some food nearly every day. One time we got talking, and it turned out that the man had been made redundant and then lost his flat. And guess what? Once, he used to be a cook in a gourmet restaurant! So I offered him a job at my food truck. He turned out to be amazing, so I decided to employ one of his friends in need. Now, our food is mouth-watering, affordable and on top of that we have created a community of people who help each other out. We meet after work, sit down, chat, and of course eat up all the leftovers. ☺

Co sądzicie o food truckach? Żywienie się w takich miejscach [1] ___. Ich właściciele uwielbiają to, co robią i pewnie dlatego [2] ___. W wielu miastach organizowane są festiwale, które są okazją do [3] ___. Ostatnio czytałam o właścicielu popularnego food trucka z Łodzi, którego biznes kwitnie między innymi dzięki kucharzowi, który był wcześniej [4] ___. Kiedyś pracował w [5] ___, ale potem [6] ___. Musiał prosić o jedzenie, a teraz sam tam gotuje. Cudna historia – nie?

Rozprawka za i przeciw

Wiele krajów ubiega się o organizowanie ważnych międzynarodowych imprez sportowych. Napisz rozprawkę przedstawiającą dobre i złe strony organizacji takich imprez dla danego kraju lub miasta.

Wypowiedź powinna zawierać 200–250 wyrazów.

Countries around the world are anxious to win the right to organise events of worldwide importance. Games such as the Olympics and the World Cup are seen as a feather in a nation's cap and a good way to raise its international profile. On the other hand, controversy has surrounded several recent world-class events, and many people claim that hosting them has many disadvantages.

There are many arguments in favour of organising such events. In the first place, being chosen as a host gives a country the sense that it is an important international player. This creates a feeling of national pride, which can reduce social and political differences. Secondly, the chosen country can showcase its culture, food and scenery, and this brings positive attention. Thirdly, local businesses can earn international recognition.

Unfortunately, countries which have hosted large events often end up with many regrets. Putting on a major competition is extremely expensive, and the host country often winds up in serious debt. In addition to this, countries are often left with sports facilities which are rarely used and expensive to maintain. Finally, the money spent on organising the event is often taken away from more urgent needs such as schools, housing and reliable infrastructure.

Each country which competes to host an important international sporting event must weigh international recognition and increased business against the possibilities of internal debt. Only after careful consideration is it possible to decide whether it will really benefit, or if it will be left in a worse condition than before the event.

TEZA: Autor odnosi się do tematu rozprawki (organizowanie międzynarodowych imprez sportowych) oraz sygnalizuje strukturę rozprawki – nadmienia, że omawiane będą zarówno zalety, jak i wady.

ROZWINIĘCIE: Autor przedstawia oba elementy tematu: (1) zalety oraz (2) wady organizacji międzynarodowych imprez sportowych.

PODSUMOWANIE: Autor podsumowuje treść rozprawki zgodnie z przedstawioną argumentacją.

Rozprawka wyrażająca opinię

Ostatnio coraz częściej można znaleźć w Internecie ogłoszenia, w których oferuje się wolne miejsca podczas wspólnych podróży samochodem. Napisz rozprawkę, w której przedstawisz swoją opinię na temat tej formy podróżowania, odnosząc się do kwestii bezpieczeństwa oraz kosztów podróży.

Wypowiedź powinna zawierać 200–250 wyrazów.

Ridesharing services are a fairly recent phenomenon, and they have caused a lot of controversy as they have grown in popularity. I am personally very much in favour of these types of services, both for their convenience and low cost. Based on my experience, I would also argue that they are a relatively safe way to travel.

One of the concerns raised about these services is safety. A number of citizens worry that the drivers of ridesharing services are neither trained nor guaranteed to be trustworthy individuals. Considering how few negative incidents have occurred since the introduction of ridesharing, I feel that this concern is unjustified. Most of the ridesharing programmes make it possible for the user to check the background of the driver as well as leave some feedback after the ride.

Cost is another concern. The opponents point out instances when ridesharing services dramatically increased their prices during special events or rush hours, causing people to pay much more than they had expected. The truth is that these instances have been rare, and that ridesharing is usually significantly cheaper than a taxi service since the costs of running the service are far lower.

There will always be people who will choose a traditional taxi because they feel more secure there, but I believe that ridesharing is the way of the future. It is convenient and affordable, and the drivers are often young, interesting people with whom it is a pleasure to share a ride.

TEZA: Autor nawiązuje do tematu rozprawki (omawia zjawisko oferowania przez kierowców wolnych miejsc osobom zainteresowanym wspólną podróżą) oraz przedstawia własną opinię na ten temat.

ROZWINIĘCIE: Autor omawia obie kwestie wskazane w poleceniu: (1) bezpieczeństwo oraz (2) koszty podróży. Argumentacja jest zgodna z opinią autora przedstawioną we wstępie rozprawki.

PODSUMOWANIE: W zakończeniu autor nawiązuje do treści zaprezentowanych w rozwinięciu i ponownie przedstawia opinie ze wstępu, używając innych sformułowań.

List formalny

Dowiedziałeś się/Dowiedziałaś się, że ze względów finansowych podjęta została decyzja o rezygnacji z planowanej rozbudowy sieci ścieżek rowerowych w okolicy, w której mieszkasz. Napisz list do redakcji gazety, w którym przedstawisz negatywne skutki takiej decyzji oraz zaproponujesz sposób pozyskania niezbędnych funduszy.

Wypowiedź powinna zawierać 200–250 wyrazów.

List zawiera odpowiednie zwroty rozpoczynające i kończące oraz jest podzielony na logiczne akapity.

To the Editor:

I am writing to express my displeasure with the fact that the city council has decided against building the additional cycle lanes which were promised. I am not at all sure that the council members understand the importance of these new paths or the importance of keeping their word.

We wstępie autor wyjaśnia cel napisania listu.

I would like to mention some of the negative consequences of neglecting to build these cycle lanes. Since more and more drivers and cyclists are using the same streets, it has become increasingly dangerous for residents to commute to work or school. Collisions happen nearly every day, and most of them occur in places without cycle lanes. In addition to this, the present situation discourages many people from cycling instead of driving. Since one of our city's goals is to reduce pollution and congestion, it makes sense that cycling should be made as safe and convenient as possible.

The council claims that it has had to use the money set aside for these paths for other projects. To solve this problem, I would suggest that cyclists be asked to pay a yearly licensing fee and that the money be used only for cycling-related improvements. I would also recommend that the city should channel the funds set aside for building an expensive new stadium into improving life for the many cyclists who depend on safe lanes to get around.

W rozwinięciu autor w sposób przejrzysty i logiczny omawia oba elementy tematu: (1) przedstawia negatywne skutki decyzji o rezygnacji z rozbudowy ścieżek rowerowych oraz (2) proponuje sposób pozyskania funduszy.

I hope the city councillors read this letter and reconsider their short-sighted decision regarding the cycle lanes. These paths are a necessity, not a luxury, and the people of our city need them.

Zakończenie listu nawiązuje do treści zaproponowanych w rozwinięciu.

Yours faithfully,

XYZ

Ostatnie badania wykazały spadek zainteresowania młodych ludzi teatrem. Napisz artykuł do czasopisma młodzieżowego, w którym omówisz zalety uczestnictwa młodych ludzi w spektaklach teatralnych oraz polecisz przedstawienie, które ostatnio oglądałeś/oglądałaś.

Wypowiedź powinna zawierać 200–250 wyrazów.

Artykuł ma ciekawy, przykuwający uwagę czytelnika tytuł.

LIVE THEATRE WILL KEEP YOU ALIVE

As recent statistics indicate, teenagers are the least likely of any age group to say they will attend the theatre. This raises the question whether this is a negative trend, as some theatre critics and educators claim. I'd say that theatre has a lot to offer to young audiences. However, I disagree with the idea that watching any play is going to improve our lives.

There are some aspects of live theatre that are absent from films or on television. One of these is the element of the unexpected. Sometimes actors forget their lines, someone trips or stumbles, or an actor expresses an emotion in a new or unique way. For the audience, it is proof that art is alive, and also that it is something we can actually experience in real time. For young people, who often remove themselves from the feelings of others and hide behind their portable screens, this can be a revelation.

A case in point is a play I went to see recently with my English class called 'Evering'. It is by a very young playwright, and it presents the interests of the youth such as friendships, social media and video games. I could see that it really resonated with my classmates. The performance was so convincing that even the most unwilling viewers were drawn in.

This demonstrates my point: we need more plays by young people, for young people, presented in innovative ways. Live theatre gives us the chance to see that great art can help a person understand his or her own emotions as well as those of people around them.

We wstępie autor stara się zachęcić czytelnika do przeczytania artykułu, przywołując ciekawe dane statystyczne. Zgodnie z tematem, odnosi się do kwestii spadku zainteresowania młodych ludzi teatrem.

W rozwinięciu autor szczegółowo omawia oba elementy tematu: (1) zalety uczestnictwa w spektaklach teatralnych oraz (2) rekomendację niedawno obejrzanego przedstawienia.

Zakończenie wypowiedzi jest ściśle związane z treścią artykułu i adekwatne do tematu. Autor unika sztampowych i schematycznych wypowiedzi.

Nina I stayed in last night and chilled out watching TV all evening, but it was really boring. There weren't any good films or drama series on. First, I watched a team of students answering questions which I couldn't even guess at! Then there were a load of celebrities being interviewed by Alan Davies. They told a couple of stories about how they had become famous, but nothing that interesting.

James You were obviously watching the wrong channel. Didn't you check out the TV guide? On Sky, I saw a great programme about sharks – very educational! Then, I thought I'd have a laugh. I watched people making fools of themselves trying to jump on big balls to get across a river! The crazy things people do to appear on TV and win a bit of money!

Nina You're lucky. We haven't got satellite TV, and it was my sister's turn to choose what to watch. I even had to sit through a politician talking about how he was going to make life better for everybody in the country!

James Mhm!

I'm afraid I'm not very adventurous or original! I like getting my news the same way as people have been getting it for a long time. I read about it in a newspaper. I really enjoy turning over the pages and choosing where I want to start or being able to look at something again. They're full of lots of different topics. You can read about news events at home and in other countries, and there are often columns where politicians or famous people give their opinions. Personally, I love the cartoon strips and the sports pages. My daughter complains that most newspapers are biased towards one political party – but that's fine with me because it's the party that I support!

I feel really strongly that newspapers aren't objective in the way that they present the news and they should be. It depends on who owns the paper and which party they support or which pays them the most, and that's not right! No, I much prefer getting impartial news from a neutral source. In my opinion, international news websites give the most reliable information about what's happening. You get the facts and that's what's important. Also, I can access online news wherever I am – on the train, in my bedroom, at school … I don't have to spend ages looking through a big newspaper to find something that I'm interested in reading!

I must admit that I'm addicted to social media sites, so it's not surprising that that's the way I get news. I'm interested in what's happening now and, as I'm on Facebook a lot of the time, I get photos and personal reports about breaking news all over the world. It's immediate – people in different countries post photos, comments and videos of events as they happen. Then other people add their comments and you get an excellent picture. It's clear, fast, effective and the best way to get objective news for my generation.

As far as I'm concerned, there's only one reliable way to get the news and that's on television. The channel that I watch is excellent at presenting the news clearly, with pictures and videos to make it interesting. Then they have discussions with experts, who give several points of view, and I can make up my own mind about what I think. The coverage of events is great too. They have reporters all over the world to get the latest stories as they happen. I really don't trust people who use social media to post pictures and news stories. How can you rely on them? Who knows what's true and what isn't? There's no one to check! They're responsible for spreading a lot of lies.

CD 1.03

I was watching a chat show the other night, and the host was talking to a journalist about the influence that the media has on people's politics. Oh, I got SO angry with the journalist. She was quoting statistics to support her view, which is that people don't change their political ideas because of what is written in newspapers. That's crazy! Everyone knows that nearly all newspapers and their online editions have a political bias, so they present the news in such a way as to persuade readers that their view is correct. They may not tell actual lies to do this, but they certainly DO bend the truth. And their readers listen to them and believe them. But there are times when they really do lie to us. Think about what happens in wartime. The public don't get the truth in the newspapers, do they? No, they are given the so-called facts that the politicians want them to hear. Propaganda like this helps governments get support for what they do. Later, when the war is over, we might learn the truth. However, even years afterwards the history books usually paint their own country in the best light. It sometimes takes decades to find out what really happened in times of conflict.

CD 1.04

Betty Hi, Adam! What are you watching?

Adam I'm watching a programme called Would I Lie to You? To be honest, I watch it quite often. It's a TV comedy panel show which has been running for twelve years. Have you ever seen it?

Betty No, I haven't. What is it about?

Adam Well, there are two teams that compete against one another. The team members try to make the other team believe some crazy stories. Sometimes they tell the truth, but often they lie through their teeth. The programme is getting funnier and funnier despite the fact that it's been on for so long. I've been watching it since I started high school, I think. I just love it!

Betty I can see! What are you doing after that? I'm going out for a meal with my friends. I've been studying the whole day and I'm tired. I need to chill out. Do you fancy joining us?

Adam I've ordered a pizza and it's on its way, plus another of my favourite series starts at 5:00, so I'd better stay at home.

Betty OK. Just don't forget to take the rubbish out. I've just cleaned the kitchen and we don't need any mess there! See you later!

Well, when it comes to live concerts, they are my favourite form of entertainment. I'd say that the main advantage of going to a concert is the fact that you have a unique chance to watch your favourite band give a live performance. There is nothing better than seeing your idols in action and hearing them play your favourite tunes. You can also meet other fans of the same band, and sing and dance together. All of this creates an unforgettable atmosphere. To sum up, live concerts are just great artistic and social events.

Personally, I think that there are many disadvantages to working as a professional musician. The main drawback is the fact that unless you become famous, it won't be easy for you to find a proper job and you may waste your talent. Another disadvantage is that even when you are famous, you may not always be happy with your job, for example, you have to give concerts all the time, which is very tiring. What's more, as a celebrity you have no privacy as paparazzi follow you everywhere. All in all, on the one hand, this profession may look very attractive, but on the other hand, it's not always well paid or easy to do.

CD 1.06

The photo shows four teenagers in a living room – two boys and two girls. They're sharing some popcorn while watching television. There is also some popcorn on the carpet. The teenagers are sitting on a sofa, and behind them there is a bookshelf with some books. It looks like they are all really good friends. I imagine they're watching a horror film because they look really scared. The popcorn is in the boxes like the ones you get at a cinema, so I guess they are pretending they are at the cinema!

CD 1.07

Teacher What is the relationship between the people in the picture?

Student In my opinion, they're boyfriends and girlfriends – two couples – because they're sitting really close to each other on the sofa. Or they might be friends or classmtes spending an evening together.

Teacher Do you enjoy watching films with friends or family? Why?
Student For me, it depends on the film and my mood. Sometimes I want to share the experience with someone else – especially when it's a comedy! But at other times, I prefer to be on my own. Then if I cry during a moving film, I don't get too embarrassed!

A Hi! How are you getting on?
B Oh, I've nearly finished, thank goodness. It's been quite difficult. Thanks for your help. You're so good at this complicated work – I wish I had half of your ability!
A No problem – glad I could help! Some of us are going for a pizza after work. Do you fancy coming?
B Sounds great. Let me know when you're going.

A I recognise you! You were at my brother's wedding.
B Yes, we spoke briefly about your car.
A That's right. It's still running well! It's a pity that my brother and his wife aren't together any more.
B Yes, such a shame. Still, maybe I'll see you again at his next wedding!

A Happy birthday, Chrissy. I hope you like your present.
B It's great, thanks. Mum says you spent too much!
A Your mum and I never agreed on anything – even when we were little. But I usually got what I wanted because I was older! I still do. Enjoy it! It's the sort of thing your mum likes – you two are so similar!

CD 1.09

Interviewer Hi, Alice. Thanks for phoning in. As you know, this morning we're talking about the sad old story of breaking up. What would you like to say on the subject?
Alice Hi! So far, your callers have been talking about how to deal with the end of romantic relationships. Everybody knows how hard that can be.
Interviewer So what other kind of relationship could we think about?
Alice Well, how about the end of a really strong friendship, a platonic one? When you've known someone and been a loyal, supportive friend for years, it can be terribly painful and heartbreaking when it ends.
Interviewer You know, that's something I've never really thought of. You tend to think that friendships end naturally when people move away or get older, perhaps get new jobs, you know – that sort of thing.
Alice Yeah, and of course that happens. But when you share a deep bond, like very close friends do and you go through all sorts of life experiences with them, it can be almost like a marriage! Then when one of the friends ends the friendship, the other one can be devastated.
Interviewer I guess you're speaking from experience, Alice?
Alice Yes, I am. A few years ago the person I'd been best friends with for ten years texted me to say she never wanted to see me or talk to me again. It was all due to a misunderstanding. She was under the impression that I was gossiping and spreading nasty rumours about her behind her back. I SO wasn't.
Interviewer Did you try to explain?
Alice Over and over again, but she wouldn't listen. I felt so bad – not because I'd done anything wrong, but because I'd lost someone who was really a big part of my life. What made it worse was that she was obviously unaffected. It left an empty place inside me. I can understand how your last caller felt when his girlfriend broke up with him after five years.
Interviewer That is such a sad story, Alice. And you've given me a lot to think about. So, listeners – do you agree? Can the end of a friendship be as heartbreaking as the end of a romance? Phone in on …

I appreciate that the end of a friendship can affect people badly. However, I really don't think you can compare it to the devastation caused by the breakup of a long-term relationship such as a marriage. I would go so far as to say that it has a relatively minor effect. After all, most of us have more than one good friend, but we don't usually have more than one long-term partner. I doubt that a friend getting grumpy because of something I said or didn't say would cause me many sleepless nights. Come on, Alice – get a life!

I know exactly where Alice is coming from. People underestimate the value and strength of a strong friendship. Just think about it. Romantic relationships break up all the time. And who is there to support us through all the emotional ups and downs? Our friends. So, when someone you've trusted and depended on for support throughout the years suddenly stops being a friend, it can be crippling. My thoughts are with you, Alice – remember, the same as for romantic breakups – time is a healer.

Well, if you ask me, conflicts show what we are made of, and whether or not we can handle our feelings not to hurt others, or if we have the strength to apologise and forgive. I'd say that instead of wallowing in grief, Alice should find a way of patching up the differences with her friend and build her relationship anew. It probably won't be easy, but it's worth a try.

Falling out with a friend can't be easy, but it's never just one person's fault. It usually takes two to tango unless we talk about the so-called toxic relationships in which one person is manipulative or uses emotional blackmail. I used to have a mate like that, and it took me ages to realise how bad the relationship was for my self-esteem. My parents helped me see through that person, and eventually we went our separate ways. I don't know if the same applies to Alice, but it's good to know that these things happen.

CD 1.11

James So this is almost the last day of university and the end of our studying. I can't believe we finish tomorrow. Next step – work! I wonder where we'll be in ten years' time. What do you think you'll be doing?
Lucy Well, with luck, I'll be earning a lot of money because I'm going to find a well-paid job! I imagine I'll have got married by then, but I probably won't have had any children. That can wait! I'll have married someone rich, so we won't be living in a small flat, but in a big country house! What will you have done by then?
James Good luck with that! I definitely won't have got married by then, but I certainly won't be living at home either. Perhaps I'll be sharing a flat with a friend. Will you still be riding your bike everywhere? I'll have learned to drive by next year, so I'll be able to come and visit you in the country! Well, talking of the very near future, what are you doing tonight, Lucy? Fancy eating out?
Lucy Why not? I'm not doing anything special. How about going to the new Chinese place? I promise I won't be late this time.
James OK, I'll be waiting outside. 7 p.m. sharp!

CD 1.12

Zac Hi, Lisa. Where have you been? I've been waiting for half an hour.
Lisa I'm awfully sorry for being late. I missed the bus.
Zac Oh, I see. Anyway, have you got any more ideas about our end-of-year class party? Why not just go out to a club like we did last year?
Lisa I'm not sure that's a good idea. I think it might be better if we do something different. I suggest a barbecue party in the park. There's a picnic area there and it's close to school.
Zac Well, I don't know. A barbecue party in the park will take a lot of preparation. Who will do the shopping and the clearing up afterwards? Maybe a better solution would be to go to a pizza place?
Lisa Don't be cross, but I would really prefer something more original. It's our last year together, so I really think that we should try to arrange something special.
Zac OK, let's give it a try. But what if it rains?
Lisa Don't be so pessimistic. I'm sure the weather will be fine. Anyway, if you agree to do the food shopping, I'll take care of the plates and cups, and things like that.
Zac Maybe the other way round? I wouldn't know what food to get.
Lisa OK, that's fine with me. Let's go shopping together and I'll ask the others to sort out the rest.

Zac Thanks, Lisa. There's one more thing ... I'm really sorry, but I've lost the Memory Stick you gave me yesterday, with all the class photos on it. I feel terrible about it.
Lisa Oh, well. Don't worry. I've saved them on my laptop, so it isn't a big deal.
Zac Let me buy you a new one to replace it.
Lisa That's fine. It's not that important. Let's make a shopping list now!

CD 1.13

Teacher Please come in. How can I help you?
Emma I'd like to talk to you for a minute about the school-leaving ball.
Teacher Certainly. What's the matter?
Emma Just a couple of questions. May we invite our boyfriends and girlfriends to come along?
Teacher I'm afraid not. The ball has always been only for our students, as you know.
Emma Yes, I do, but I thought perhaps we could possibly change it this year.
Teacher I'm sorry, but it's impossible.
Emma Oh, I see. Another thing has to do with the dress code. Are we allowed to wear whatever we like?
Teacher Yes, that's fine. No problem as long as you make sure you look smart and presentable.
Emma Thank you. And one more thing, actually. It's about Tracy. She doesn't want to come to the ball because she has fallen out with some of the people in our class. Would you be able to do something about it?
Teacher Certainly, but have you talked to her yourself?
Emma I've tried, but she doesn't really want to open up to me. It would be a shame if she didn't come.
Teacher OK. Leave it with me then.
Emma Thank you. I would be grateful for your help.
Teacher You're welcome.

Hi, I'm Zuza. I'm from Poland and I've just returned from my Erasmus programme. What I enjoyed the most was actually the fact that I acquired a set of completely new skills such as creative thinking and project planning, which I guess I'll be able to employ in many situations in my life. I also hope that I'll become more employable in the future as a result. It was great to meet so many people and get to know their cultures. Really worthwhile.

Hi. My name's Paul and I'm English. I believe I really benefited from the programme. I gained a lot of hands-on knowledge on running a small business. What is more, I got some new competences which are pretty universal such as critical thinking. I believe I stand a greater chance of landing a good job as a result. I also improved my French, which is added value.

Hello, Peter here. I'm from the Netherlands, and for me the biggest advantage of the Erasmus programme was learning how to be more entrepreneurial, if you know what I mean. Be more courageous, decisive and business-like. On top of that, I also became more skilled, I mean I acquired some soft skills which I'd lacked before. Apparently, that's what's likely to help your career advancement, so fingers crossed.

CD 1.16

Radio presenter Hello, with us in the studio is Tina Fry, a young businesswoman who has just won the best start-up leader award. Pleasure to meet you, Tina. Tell us why you think you've won the contest.
Tina Fry Hello everyone. What a question to begin the interview with! You should ask the committee, not me. Well, I guess I must have met all the criteria that they were looking for.
Radio presenter Such as?
Tina Fry The notion of leadership has changed over the years. You may remember that in the past an effective leader was supposed to be tough, focused on results and be in charge of everything. Now leaders are seen as enablers, facilitators, people who help the other members of the team succeed and learn new skills, and I think that's what I am good at, and it's what was noticed by the jury.
Radio presenter You're only 25 years old. How come you know what it takes to be a great leader? And what does it actually mean?
Tina Fry I have always been a people person, even at school I would take on various projects and gather people round me. It just comes naturally to me, it's in my genes, I'd say. As for the qualities of a great leader, one has to know how to manage different people on your team, how to communicate with them and work with the talents they have rather than look for faults in them - my focus this year in fact. For example, when you delegate tasks to people, make sure the task fits the person's competencies and interests, don't force things on people. It's counter-productive, never ever go down this path.
Radio presenter Empower through delegation, they say. Focus on people's strengths... What about sharing information and giving feedback to your team?
Tina Fry Yes, that's also top on the list of qualities leaders should be equipped with. Share as much information as you can, so that people feel they are in the loop, they know what's going on. Constructive feedback is also a key factor. It's not easy to give it, but it's crucial to a person's performance. In my start-up, we give each other feedback every week. I also get it from the others, it's always very useful.
Radio presenter One final piece of advice for future leaders?
Tina Fry Appreciate what people do, say thank you, pay compliments, but also set high expectations and believe in your team. Treat them the way you'd like to be treated yourself!
Radio presenter Well, well. Hardly surprising you've won the contest. Your team must love you. Congratulations once again.
Tina Fry Thanks a lot. I love them too, and all they do for the company!

CD 1.17

Recruiter OK, Joe. Thanks for coming. We are looking for a team leader to be in charge of our art project. Have you got any experience in running similar projects?
Joe Yes, I was once put in charge of a big theatre project at school. My responsibilities included finding the venue for our performance, communicating with the people on the team, and scheduling the rehearsals. I was also a head boy at school, and that involved a lot of work on various school projects.
Recruiter OK, sounds good. What qualities do you think you have to take on such responsibilities?
Joe My enthusiasm, determination to see the project through. I'm also very communicative and cooperative.
Recruiter Are there any areas where you might need support as a team leader?
Joe Well, perhaps I could do with some help when we start looking for the people for your project. Also, maybe someone could give me a hand with the advertising side of the project. It's not my strong suit.
Recruiter OK, thanks for now. We'll be in touch.

CD 1.18

From what I can gather, the picture was taken in some kind of an office. It depicts a man, probably a manager, who has fallen asleep on his desk. Judging from his face, he's fast asleep. He's wearing formal clothes suggesting that he's at work. He looks as if he has been working on some difficult and tiring project. Now, he's sitting on his swivel chair in front of his desktop computer and he's resting his head on the keyboard. He was probably exhausted and that's why he's dropped off like that. He appears to be alone in his office, so no one can see him asleep.

Boy So, how should one prepare for an interview these days?
Woman Well, these days when people are shortlisted for an interview, they can get questions which may appear somewhat strange. You should be prepared to show that you can think in an original way so that your chances of getting employed increase. I know what I am talking about because I've been through a few of these interviews and

I got asked really odd questions. The one I got stuck on was 'What tree would I want to be if I were a tree?' What was I supposed to say? I don't want to be a tree! Well, I think that they ask you these types of questions to figure out how intelligent, imaginative and creative you are ...

CD 1.21

Tracy Hi, Julie. Do you know anything about Laura's interview? She was meant to get in touch.
Julie Hi. Yes, I do. I've just spoken to her and she sounded very unsure. She complained that she got really tough questions which she didn't know how to handle. She was prepared to answer questions about her achievements, interests and experience rather than some weird questions.
Tracy Oh... What questions were they?
Julie For instance, if I remember correctly, 'If you were given a giraffe, and you couldn't sell it or get rid of it, what would you do with it?' or 'If you could compare yourself to any animal, which would it be and why?' Don't you find them a little odd?
Tracy Confusing, to say the least. I wouldn't have a clue what to say myself. No one at uni prepares you for stuff like that, do they? Plus, she's only just graduated, so it's not easy to fare well in an interview in the first place, not to mention the difficulty of such questions. Why do they do things like that?
Julie I told Laura, but she wouldn't listen. I guess hiring managers noticed that asking standard questions gets them standard responses. People rehearse these questions before interviews, and as a result, they aren't themselves. Unconventional questions like these ones allow you to investigate how quick-thinking your candidate is and how well they deal with stress. Additionally, it helps you get an insight into your candidate's true personality. As a matter of fact, funny and unexpected questions have proven so useful during the recruitment process that big corporations tend to use at least one or two during their interviews. That's what I've heard.
Tracy I see. Oh well. I'd better ring Laura and speak to her myself. Thanks. See you later.
Julie Bye.

Girl So, how to prepare best for my interview? I didn't have much practice at school, and I don't know how to go about it.
Man I'm glad you ask as little things can make a big difference. First of all, you must make sure you make the right impression. You never get a second chance to make the first impression as it were.
Girl Yes, I know that, but what exactly does it involve?
Man For a start, come on time. So many young people arrive late and write off their chance of being employed straightaway. Then, remember to dress appropriately. Your outfit should be elegant but modest. Walk in with a smile on your face and try to look confident. Shake people's hands. Make sure it's a firm handshake, not one of those really limp ones.
Girl OK. I need to practise these smiles and handshakes, it's not what I usually do. I'm a bit of an introvert.
Man In that case, you must practise this beforehand. Also, prepare for unconventional questions. Get your friends to ask you all kinds of silly or weird questions, and try to provide a sensible answer. It really helps.
Girl OK, that's a good idea. But introverts aren't good at small talk and talking in general. What do I do?
Man Well, you've got to open up. You can always say that you'd rather reflect on things before you come up with solutions, that you are focused on problems and say that solving them is your strong suit, if it's true of course. They like problem solvers in companies.
Girl OK, I'll try. Thanks.
Man You're welcome.

I've just read the results of a survey on Net addiction among young adults, and in some way I was relieved to find out that only 16% seem obsessively addicted to the Internet. Well, it's still a significant number of respondents (there were 1,300 of them) who admitted to spending 15 hours a day glued to their online devices. The researchers asked young people how much time they spend online, how much they panic without access to the Net, and how they think time spent online affects their relationships with other people. A lot of them responded saying that they feel a sense of euphoria only when online. It's like a drug addiction, your brain reacts in the same way to the lack of what you crave for. The respondents were asked how their use of the Internet has impacted on their relationships with other people in the past 12 months, and that was the saddest news for me. It turned out that 90% of those people lost touch with their closest family or avoided conversations with them.

Giving first aid needs confidence. You really need to be certain of how to react in a given situation. For me the most challenging is helping a person who has suffered an allergic reaction as it may take split seconds for this person to die. The symptoms include a rash or swelling on their body, including the face and the neck, which may slow down your breathing. If the swelling is very serious, the airways get blocked, and you may simply stop breathing. People who have a known allergy should carry an auto-injector with them. If so, follow the instructions on the device. If not, send for an ambulance, and make the sufferer as comfortable as possible until paramedics arrive. Remove the allergen if possible.

For me, the hardest was to learn how to help someone who is breathing but is unresponsive because you know they are alive, but can't tell you what's wrong with them. When the person is like that, their muscles relax and their tongue may block their airways. You need to move their head back, put them on their side in a safe position. Under no circumstances give them mouth-to-mouth! Call 112 as soon as possible and wait for help. It's important to check the person's breathing every 30 seconds until the paramedics arrive.

During my first aid course, I learnt how to react in various situations. What I remember the most is what to do when you suspect someone has had a stroke. Strokes happen due to a blockage of the blood supply to the brain, which may have an effect on the sufferer's appearance, speech or sight. The thing you need to do is carry out the so-called FAST test. F for face. Check if there is weakness on one side of their face. A for Arms. See if the person can raise both arms. S for speech. Listen and determine if you can easily understand what the person is saying. T is for time: call 999 immediately. The sooner help arrives, the less damage the brain will sustain.

Helping someone who is not breathing and is unresponsive is a bit of a challenge, but it isn't impossible to learn. First, make sure they are not breathing: their chest and stomach won't be moving and you won't hear any breaths. Call an ambulance, and while you are waiting, give chest compressions which we call CPR (cardiopulmonary resuscitation). If there is a defib (defibrillator), use it according to the instructions. These machines can shock the heart back into a normal rhythm. These days you can find defibs in many public places, so do look around.

CD 1.25

I was once a witness to a terrible crash. It'll stay with me for the rest of my life, I think. I was walking back home when I heard this most awful bang behind me. I looked back and it turned out that a speeding car had run into a cyclist on the pedestrian crossing. The car sped away. The cyclist was lying on the road, bleeding, but he was conscious. I ran towards him, but I really didn't have a clue what to do. He was mumbling something and kept talking about his wife. I tried to show that I was listening to him, trying to stop the bleeding with my own shirt. Another man came along, and he called 999. The cyclist started to groan in pain and he was losing consciousness. I started to panic and was feeling out of my depth. In the meantime, the guy who came along had left. The ambulance wasn't coming. The cyclist wasn't breathing. I felt lost and was trying desperately to recall how to give first aid. Just when I was about to start to give the guy a mouth-to-mouth, I heard the wail of the ambulance. The paramedics arrived and took charge. I was so distressed myself that I couldn't speak. That experience left me traumatised for some time to come. It also made me join a first aid course. I don't ever wish to be in a situation like that and lose my cool. Luckily the cyclist made it. It was my only consolation …

Reporter A recent report says that over 200,000 teens aged 13–19 in the USA underwent plastic surgery last year. Social media are to blame, experts say. Dr Philips, is that true? And if so, why do teens want to go through all that pain?
Dr Philips I'm afraid it is true, and we do look for the reasons in social media. Teenagers look at images of celebrities and other young people which have been photoshopped, and they want to look like that. The most common procedures are to improve one's nose, ears, lips, chin, tummy and legs. These are serious surgeries, and I keep telling all my patients that they shouldn't go for plastic surgeries as these are too risky and often simply unnecessary.

CD 1.27

Quite frankly, none of these options really suit me. However, if I were to choose one, I'd go for the yoga exercises. Yoga is a form of physical and mental activity, which appeals to me. Another argument in favour of yoga would be that it is a group activity which means I will get to meet other people and possibly make new friends. I might opt for yoga too since it is meant to help you overcome stress from what I've heard. As regards the other options, I wouldn't choose the sauna experience because I'm simply not a fan of sitting in steam rooms and sweating it out. Nor do I like it when someone gives me a massage. I just don't like it when someone touches my body. Relaxing as they sound, the other two options are just not my cup of tea.

Jeff Matt, we know that young adults and adults watch animated movies with as much interest as children. It's understandable with kids, but why do grown-ups go for films like that?
Matt Yes, indeed. It's a growing trend, and we are witnessing an increased interest in cartoons and cartoon-related merchandise among people who are twenty plus. I guess such shows are a welcome break from all the misery and violence of the real world, just some form of relief from reality. Cartoons and animated movies are full of good-natured characters who always overcome evil. That's for sure one of the reasons.
Jeff Yes, I thought it could be the case. I also tend to believe that adults as much as children can identify with cartoon characters. Would you go along with that?
Matt Couldn't agree more. Cartoon characters resonate with people of all ages. Most people recognise certain behaviour patterns, see themselves in the situations the protagonists are experiencing. Age is irrelevant here. Some experts also say that it's because the so-called millennials don't want to grow up. I don't know where I stand on that, it could be true too.
Jeff Isn't it called kidult?
Matt Yes, indeed. Kidult refers to adults who purchase the same things as teenagers. It is reflected in their everyday choices, be it a book or a T-shirt.
Jeff I have noticed lots of products with various cartoon characters on them in shops lately. They are targeted at adults, not just children. Is it a way of regaining your childhood or something?
Matt It could be. Most of us remember our childhoods rather fondly, and these movies remind us of how innocent and care-free life was.
Jeff I guess so …

A You can't tell me that you've never cheated in an exam?
B No, I haven't! I think I'm just too scared. I'm afraid someone would catch me, and my parents would be absolutely furious and disappointed in me.
A So it's not a moral issue with you?
B You mean do I think it's just wrong to cheat? I suppose there is that as well. I'd be disappointed in myself too, I guess. Wouldn't you?
A Nope. I wouldn't go out of my way to cheat. But if a question paper with answers was lying around on a desk, I might risk a quick look! You can't blame people for trying!
B Mm. I don't think I really approve of that.

And on Topic for Today on Channel 4 at 9 o'clock, we have a debate on crime and punishment. Robin Woodson and the panel will be discussing the issue of how to punish offenders for different crimes, and then the phone lines will be open for the public to cast their vote on the major questions. Remember not to vote until the discussion has finished. If you vote too early, then your vote will not be valid, but you may still be charged.

This announcement is to remind all passengers who are flying today that there will be increased security checks before you enter the departure lounge. This may result in long queues, so we would ask all passengers to allow an additional half-hour for possible delays. If you have any queries, please come immediately to the information desk. Thank you.

I'd first like to thank everyone who voted for me and to say that I'll do my best to represent your interests in Parliament. I know that a lot of you are worried about the proposed legislation that would allow hundreds of new homes to be built in this area and I'm planning to fight this every step of the way. If you would like to protest against the proposed changes, please sign the online petition. We can prevent this from happening. I know I can count on your support.

Hi, Kate – it's me. You must have left for the party already. I just wanted to let you know that there's a new speed camera on the A65 road to the coast, just after the turning to Parklands. Watch out for it! I got caught this morning – I was only doing about five miles an hour over the limit, but I saw the flash, and I'm sure to get a fine of about £60 and three points on my licence. Be careful!

A Do you think such a sign actually prevents anyone from nicking things? Personally, I doubt it.
B Well, when I look at one, I feel discouraged enough, but then again I'm a law-abiding citizen. However, I guess that it's designed to warn people against the consequences of the crime they may be thinking of committing.
A Possibly, as a deterrent for someone who hasn't done it before, but for anyone who does it without thinking it means nothing. There should be cameras in the fitting rooms!
B What? Are you off your head?

CD 2.02

Interviewer OK, so tonight we're talking about recreational drug use and how it can be stopped. Jacky Nelson, what's your opinion?
Jacky Yes, well, unfortunately, I don't think it can be stopped altogether. Young people will always be tempted to take drugs for the experience, and for many of them this will inevitably lead to addiction. It's human nature to want to try something different, and just because it's against the law doesn't mean that they will be put off – in fact, quite the opposite.
Interviewer Yes, I understand where you're coming from, but could we focus on the legal highs that are getting so much press these days? The point here is they are legal, so young people can buy them online or from someone at a party. The fact that they're legal probably means that kids who wouldn't normally take recreational drugs think that they're safe … while they're not.
Jacky Far from it! There have been a lot of deaths recently from legal highs. The trouble with these drugs is that at first – when the drugs initially appear – they are chemically pure. OK, they're not good for our health in the long run, but teenagers think it's OK to take them once or twice. However, later when the drug has created a need, the makers start adding cheap materials like caffeine to the pills to make more profit, and then the pills become very, very dangerous – causing death in some cases.

Interviewer Yes, there have been several deaths recently.
Jacky The problem is that although the government is aware of the problem, as soon as they make one of these drugs illegal, another appears on the market. It's impossible to keep up with the producers.
Interviewer Perhaps the recent campaign by the parents of one kid who died after taking one of these drugs at a party will be effective?
Jacky Yes, I think it could well be. Their story has gone viral already – it's all over the social media websites – that is the way to reach people these days. Also, the new law that comes into effect later this year has a much wider range. It will ban all mind-altering substances and make them illegal. In theory, it should cover all these drugs we've been discussing. How it works in practice we shall have to wait and see. The makers of these terrible drugs are very clever at finding ways round the rules for as long as possible.
Interviewer In the parents' campaign, they ask teenagers to tell their parents or teachers about the friends they have who take these drugs. Do you think that will happen?
Jacky I don't know. In spite of the seriousness of the problem, kids are not willing to report a mate. It's a question of loyalty.
Interviewer Let's put that to the vote, shall we? The big question tonight is: Would you report a friend who you know is taking designer drugs? Yes or no? The phone lines will be open for fifteen minutes.

CD 2.03

Mike I was wondering if you have seen the graffiti on the school wall. It's so awful, isn't it?
Susie Yeah. Someone must have done it late last night. It wasn't there when we finished the school play rehearsal at 9.30, was it?
Mike No, I don't think so. Do you know who did it?
Susie Not really, but everyone is saying that it's Mark Hammond from 3rd grade. He's done something like this before, hasn't he?
Mike Mark? No way. Stop spreading rumours about people when you have no evidence, will you?
Susie Sorry. I'd like to know who could have done something like this. People just don't think, do they?
Mike If only I knew. Let's go and ask the others, shall we? Maybe they have some idea who's behind it.
Susie OK. But beforehand, help with me my maths homework, will you?

CD 2.04

I can't be 100% sure, but I imagine that photograph may have been taken somewhere in an Arab country. I am almost certain that it shows Angelina Jolie, the famous American actress. It seems that she may have visited er, er I don't know what you call it in English, but it's a place for er, er people who have had to leave their homes because of a war. In the foreground, I can see the actress and some men. They could be politicians, or her er, er, er I mean people who protect her. I suppose the actress is making a speech or giving an interview. I get the impression that she's quite concerned with what she has seen because she looks very serious. In the background, there are some young people who are listening to her, and lots of white er, er, er things like houses made of material where these people probably live. I expect it must be hard to live in a place like that.

CD 2.05

Teacher What do you think the actress experienced when she was visiting the camp?
Student I think this experience can't have been easy for her. She probably saw a lot of poor people.
Teacher Are you a good public speaker? What makes you say so?
Student To be honest, I don't think I'm a good public speaker. Being a public speaker is not for me. I don't like speaking in public.

CD 2.06

I'm going to tell you about a charity event I took part in. It happened not long ago, when I was working as a volunteer for Polska Akcja Humanitarna. I decided to join their campaign after a terrible earthquake in Nepal a few days earlier. I worked with five other people. We were walking down the streets and encouraging people to donate money for Nepal. People could buy special T-shirts or send text messages to a special number. I felt good about helping others and very proud of our team. I must say it was the best experience I had ever had in my life.

a Personally, I think they're a TERRIBLE idea – they look ugly and surely they don't work when it's cloudy!
b How on earth do you calculate THAT? How many miles have I travelled? How many vegetables from other countries have I eaten? How much packaging do I throw away? Impossible!
c These are getting fuller and fuller. We're running out of space for many more. And they smell TERRIBLE if you live close!
d The river near here is full of them. I blame the factory and the rubbish dump too. Have you seen all the dead fish? I NEVER swim there anymore.
e This way of producing meat is BARBARIC! Have you seen the pictures of cows just crowded together and never ever moving? It's horrid. And the methane gas they produce adds enormously to the air pollution.
f If you go scuba diving in Australia, you can see how they've been damaged. If they disappear completely, it will affect EVERY aspect of marine life and then where will we be?

I know it's what we are all studying at the moment, but I think everyone's obsessing too much about WHY we've got so many environmental problems like floods and baking hot summers, and we aren't thinking enough about how we ought to deal with them. The past is the past, right? And we've got to cope with things that are happening right now and also, what's really important, plan how to deal with stuff like flooding and rising sea levels in the future so that my generation can actually survive! Perhaps we've got to stop building houses near the coast and move everyone to higher land. Maybe that sounds far-fetched, but we've got to do something radical.

Whether climate change is a result of humanity's increased use of fossil fuels or natural changes to the planet, the consequences need to be dealt with, and the international meeting held in London earlier today, attended by representatives of our government, debated those issues. A summary of the points discussed, along with proposed solutions, will be published next month. A spokesperson for the conference described the meeting as progressive and an important step forward in bringing innovative ideas together in the fight to protect the environment and prepare for future problems.

We had a really bad time last winter. Our house is quite close to the river, and after all the rain the river burst its banks, and the water came up the road and into all the houses! We dashed around, trying to move all the important things upstairs, but it still caused loads of damage. We had to live in a caravan in the garden for months afterwards before the house was ready for us to move back in! We need to look to the scientists now. There have got to be some new technological advances that can stop this happening. You know, equipping new houses with special walls that come up when the water rises and strong banks by the rivers to stop them flooding. The problem isn't going to go away next year, is it?

If the reports and film footage of the severe flooding last year and the terrible heatwaves we've been experiencing this summer haven't got you worried, then nothing will! Scientists have been warning us for years that climate change is here to stay, and what has the government done? Zilch! For goodness sake, we've got to stop sleepwalking into a total disaster. So, tell all your friends to go on our peaceful March for Action on Climate Change in London next Saturday. We don't want more reports on why it's happened – we want more money to stop its effects! See you all at the weekend.

CD 2.09

Man It's quite clear to me that it's people's attitude to the environment that needs to change if we're going to get anywhere in the fight against the problems the world is facing. We, that's you, me and everyone watching at home, need to take responsibility. We need to change people's mindsets and instil new habits. We have to recycle, cut down on our use of gas and oil, not buy more than we need …

Woman I'm sorry, but I just don't buy into this whole 'it's down to us' thing. Haven't you noticed? People ARE recycling, they're getting house insulation, putting in solar panels … There's only so much we, as individuals, can do! It's governments that need to tackle the problem on the world stage. They must introduce new laws, stop big corporations from cutting down rainforests, make the big industrial plants cut their pollution levels, invest in research, and more.
Man But it all starts with individual steps …
Woman I'm sorry, but I completely disagree! You are totally missing the point. If you think a few people refusing to use plastic bags is going to make the whole problem go away, then you are very much mistaken!
Man You know very well that is NOT what I'm saying …

CD 2.10

Interviewer So, Brendan, is the fire out now?
Brendan Yes, almost. We're lucky. It could have been a lot worse. The fire might have spread much further if the wind had been in a different direction.
Interviewer Did you get an early warning of the fire?
Brendan Not really. It had already developed into quite a big fire when we got there. If we'd known about it earlier, we would have been able to put it out faster.
Interviewer Would it have started so quickly if the ground hadn't been so dry?
Brendan Oh no. If we'd had more rain over the last few months, it wouldn't have been so bad.
Interviewer I hear you used a new device that showed you how the fire was moving?
Brendan Yes, it was amazing. If we hadn't used it, we would have had a much harder job chasing the fire.

CD 2.11

Ola I've just heard someone on the radio say that cycling is the best way to get around the city. Frankly, I doubt it. It may be the most environmentally friendly, but surely not the safest for the cyclist.
Philip Why not? There are bike lanes everywhere now. Why don't you like the idea?
Ola It's all very well, but in Poland, for example, there aren't enough bike lanes, so cyclists have to use roads. This leads to accidents. And I think the situation is unlikely to change for the better. Cycling is trendy, so certainly, there will be more bikes in our cities, but the number of cars won't go down. I guess more cyclists will mean more accidents.
Philip How pessimistic! No doubt, the situation will improve. There is every chance that there will be more and more bike lanes in the future, and also the drivers will get used to the cyclists, and both will be more careful.
Ola Maybe, though I'm not so optimistic. If they introduced a ban on cars in the city centres, it would be something. Cyclists would be much safer then. Don't you think?
Philip Sure, but how realistic is that?
Ola I wish it was! And if it ever happens, I'll start cycling in the city myself.

CD 2.12

Peter I'm sorry I'm late, but I got stuck in the city centre. There were lots of cyclists on their bikes, riding through the main streets, blocking all the cars behind them. It's not right, is it?
Julia Well, it happens every last Friday of the month. It's called Critical Mass, and it's like a protest event. Cyclists want to draw people's attention to problems such as the need for more bike lanes and the safety of cyclists in the city. I reckon it's a good idea.
Peter I totally disagree. What they do is just block the traffic and annoy people! Is it even legal?
Julia Of course it is, but I see what you mean. They just want to show how difficult it is to cycle when you are part of the city traffic, when you are stuck behind all the cars. Isn't it high time people realised what the problem is?
Peter I agree up to a point. People have the right to protest, but you can't just block all the streets like that! Why don't they organise a march or write a petition?
Julia Because even if they did, it wouldn't have such an impact on people as slowing down the traffic, other cars and even buses which want to use the same route. What they do may make drivers angry, but it also makes them think about the problem.
Peter I'm not so sure that's true. In fact, it's turned me against cyclists even more. I'd rather they cycled in the forest or parks than in the city centre. That's where they belong!
Julia Oh, Peter! You sound like my father. He says cyclists in cities are danger to drivers and themselves.
Peter Spot on. I couldn't agree more. I love cycling, but this city is not ready for cyclists yet.
Julia Well, I think both of you are completely wrong. Cycling is fantastic and it's here to stay.

A
The first picture shows children playing on a dirty, littered beach whereas the other shows a group of people picking the litter up. In my opinion, the picture with the teenagers in it would be more appropriate for the campaign because young people can identify with the volunteers in the picture. It shows enthusiasm and a friendly atmosphere between the people while doing an important job. Although the first picture shows the problem itself more clearly, I don't think it would appeal to volunteers because it doesn't show the good work that they can do.

The two pictures are good to show how many rubbish is on our beaches. It is really terrible. One picture show childrens on dirty beach. In other picture people are cleaning the beach. I think picture two is better. Litter is dangerous for children. People must not to throw things on the beach.

Unit 7

CD 2.14

Tom You seem to eat pretty healthy and nutritious food most of the time, Sue. Are you following a certain kind of diet, or is it simply that you find some kinds of food unappealing?
Sue I'm not following a diet, no. Actually, I think most strict diets are pretty harmful, and I believe they make you fret about food way too much. I can't really think of a type of food I wouldn't touch … I'm just trying to be sensible about what I eat.
Tom But I've hardly ever seen you eat anything sweet like cakes or pastries. Do you really not fancy them then?
Sue No, I find them really scrumptious, and I do eat some – I just try not to overdo it. It's not that I'm afraid of gaining weight or anything, I only think it's better to avoid too much refined sugar and white flour. Sweet things are supposed to be a treat, right? Not the main part of your diet!
Tom So what's your absolutely most beloved food?
Sue Well, I adore fresh vegetables, especially salads. My parents used to call me 'little rabbit' because I fed myself with mainly greens when I was small. Another thing I find totally moreish is bacon. I'd eat it with every meal if I could.
Tom I'm with you there, but I suppose all the salt in it isn't very beneficial for you. I'll tell you what my absolutely favourite food is, though – chips! In fact, I enjoy fried foods of all kinds. Fish and chips, though – that's the perfect meal for me. Really enjoyable!
Sue What about vegetables? I don't see YOU eating salad very often.
Tom It's not that I don't like it. It just seems like a lot of work, if you know what I mean. All that washing and chopping, and you're still starving afterwards. I don't mind cooked vegetables, though, just so long as they aren't soggy or smelly. Nothing puts me off more than overcooked veg!

CD 2.15

Interviewer Welcome to Chat Time on Radio 8. I'm very happy to be talking to Della Radcliffe today in her highly recommended restaurant, Pot Pan. Thanks for inviting me, Della.
Della Thanks. It's great of you to come and visit.
Interviewer First off, I've noticed that we're the only ones here today. Is it a day off for your restaurant?
Della Yes, we're shut on Mondays. Making and serving food is such a high-energy business I feel like we all deserve a whole day off once a week. You can't believe how crazy it is in here on a normal day – it would be pretty impossible to do an interview with all the activity.

Interviewer I understand. So, my first question is: You are well-known as one of the youngest chefs to ever open their own restaurant here. How did that come about?
Della Well, first I'll tell you how I came to cook. When I was growing up, my grandmother lived with us, and she was an amazing cook. I was fascinated by the way she could create wonderful dishes out of a few raw ingredients, and they were always delicious. I was always in the kitchen, so when I was about 6, she'd give me little tasks – just washing vegetables and things like that. But by the time I was 8, she was teaching me how to make some of her most unique dishes, and I was hooked.
Interviewer So you haven't been to a cooking school or had any professional training?
Della Not exactly, no. All of my training was practical. I got my first actual cooking job at the age of seventeen at a really good traditional restaurant. The owner was very open-minded, so I started creating my own recipes based on what my gran had taught me. It turned out that people really liked them – which of course is the whole point of cooking – so I felt more self-confident about developing my own style.
Interviewer How would you describe your style of cooking?
Della I'd say it's fairly traditional, but with a modern-day twist. I'll take a normal vegetable dish, for example, but while most cooks would boil the vegetables until they're soggy, I'll grill them and serve them crisp, with some herbs or lemon juice to give them more intensity. It's vital for food to look good too, so the colours are very important.
Interviewer What do you think of fusion cooking, where the styles of different countries are combined?
Della Well, it's not really my approach, though I do borrow techniques from other cooking styles for some of my dishes. One thing I don't understand at ALL is molecular gastronomy.
Interviewer Which is?
Della It's where chefs use scientific techniques to turn food into forms and textures that are completely unrecognisable – for example, there's a thing that looks like an egg yolk which is actually made out of mango fruit. I like to look at a food and understand what I'm about to eat! Oh, and about opening my restaurant when I was twenty. The restaurant owner I've mentioned before was so impressed with my skills that she decided to finance a new restaurant that would allow me to develop my own style. It's a high risk business, so I'll always be grateful for the monetary help. Without her support, I would never have had such an amazing opportunity!

CD 2.16

While we tend to think of hunger as a phenomenon which occurs exclusively in developing countries, the truth is that as many as one in five children in the developed world goes to bed hungry each night or goes to school on an empty stomach each morning. It is also true that many more families depend on free food from food banks and other charities, and that they still fail to meet the basic food needs of their families. What is particularly disturbing about this situation is that a wealthy couple can spend a few hundred dollars on a single restaurant meal, while poor families have less than that amount to spend on groceries and other necessities for an entire month. As leaders of the community, we need to come together and find a solution to this problem, which will only get worse as the population increases and the price of food continues to rise.

James Have many people made reservations for the restaurant opening tomorrow evening?
Lucy I'm afraid we only have a few bookings. We didn't really give people a lot of advance notice. In fact, people only had a couple of days to make plans after we sent out the emails and put the announcement on social media.
James That's my fault, I'm afraid. I forgot! Well, several of my friends are coming for sure. And I suspect most of the local restaurant critics will be here. Anyhow, there's little we can do about it now. Let's just hope for the best. So, have all of the supplies been delivered?
Lucy I think so. We have plenty of fresh vegetables, and there's a lot of meat and fish. Unfortunately, none of the baked goods have arrived yet.
James Oh, those are coming tomorrow. We want to make sure they're very fresh. What about the sparkling water?
Lucy Well, some of the water is here. Unfortunately, if you want French sparkling water, there is none at all. I tried both of our suppliers, but neither of them had any.
James You'd think suppliers could complete the entire order, but in my experience, they never do. Anyhow, we have a great amount of water from other countries, so it shouldn't be a problem.
Lucy Then I guess we're ready to go. I'm so excited. I'm sure this restaurant is going to be a huge success!

There is a lot of talk nowadays about food allergies and food intolerances, and often people can't explain the difference clearly. An intolerance often causes stomach discomfort and other digestive problems, but it isn't life-threatening. So, you need to steer clear of certain foods when possible, but there's no reason that you must avoid them at all costs. Food allergies tend to be more serious. I have an allergy to cucumbers and melons, so I am not able to eat them at all. As a child, I was able to eat all fruits and vegetables without any problem, but later I noticed that when I tried to talk after eating cucumbers, I had to clear my throat a lot.

Later, I found that I couldn't swallow properly after eating them. I thought, 'Next time I won't be able to breathe!' and decided that I needed to avoid them. Of course, many people suffer from allergies to foods which are so severe that even the dust from a peanut could possibly kill them. In my case, I will just need to check restaurant food for any suspicious ingredients and get on with my life.

Did you know that Poland is among the five most wasteful nations in Europe when it comes to food, just after Great Britain, Germany, France and Holland? Nine million tonnes of food go to waste in this country, and both food producers and individual consumers are to blame. Around two million tonnes of food are wasted by individual households each year. The food products most often wasted are bread, fruit, cold meat, vegetables, dairy products and ready-made meals. The most food gets wasted by young, well-educated people living in big cities. Also, the wealthier the person, is the more food he or she is likely to put in the bin. Luckily, there are food banks in Poland which distribute about 140,000,000 kg of unwanted grocery products every year to reduce food waste. In 2015, food banks helped feed around 200,000 people with groceries worth 320,000,000 PLN!

Young people do not always make wise food choices. Being a young person myself, and a lover of fast food, I know first-hand that this is true. Give me the choice between broccoli and chips, and the chips will win every time! Seriously though, it is a fact that people do not always use their knowledge of what is healthy to choose what they are going to eat. And I firmly believe that the government has a duty to protect its citizens. For this reason, I support the idea of making laws to limit the size of soft drinks and reduce the fat and sugar content of the food we buy.

People who oppose this idea say that freedom of choice is more important. The problem with this argument is that people do not really have free choice when it comes to unhealthy food.

In the first place, we are constantly bombarded with adverts promoting unhealthy choices, so everywhere we go, we are tempted to buy things which are not good for us. This means that we are not actually choosing for ourselves at all.

My second point is that our busy lifestyles make choosing unhealthy foods much easier than choosing healthy ones. Fast food is readily available, but it is a fact that healthier choices are harder to find and may need time and effort to prepare. If healthier choices were as widely available and convenient as fast food, I think we would be more likely to eat in a healthier way.

The third point I want to make is that the price plays a role in our choices. Fast food tends to be cheaper than healthy food, and so young people with limited budgets make the obvious choice. If the government introduced rules that would limit the prices of healthy food options, I am convinced that eating habits would improve dramatically.

For these reasons, I am wholly in favour of limiting unhealthy food options. I also support reducing the amount of advertising for junk food and introducing price limits on healthy food options. In addition to this, I believe that more should be done to teach students about good nutrition in schools. With these actions, everyone would have a much better chance of leading healthy lives.

Just imagine that you're at a buffet, and you have a choice between a delicious, juicy hamburger and a serving of crisp kale salad. Now, if you're like me, you'll know the answer – the burger is victorious, and the kale can go back to whatever too-healthy place it came from. The idea that everyone should be made to stick to a vegetarian or vegan diet is something worth fighting against, and I'm willing to be one of the soldiers in the fight. I think we need meat to grow a healthy body and mind, and I'm also sure we can find less harmful ways to raise farm animals. OK, let's grow more vegetables and raise fewer animals if we have to – but let me choose a tasty steak or burger now and then, please!

To my mind, reducing the number of animal products we consume would be a wise step towards protecting our environment and making sure that everyone in the world had enough to eat. Studies have shown that a balanced vegetarian or vegan diet can be extremely healthy, can provide all of the nutrients we need and has a much more limited environmental impact than an animal-based diet. In fact, research shows that 18% of all greenhouse gases are caused by animal agriculture. Animal farming not only causes pollution to air and water but also poses a threat to public health because of overuse of antibiotics. For these reasons, the argument for a vegetarian or vegan diet seems very convincing.

Cindy Hi, Paul.
Paul Hey, Cindy. Thanks again for lending me your scooter, but I'm having a small problem … I can't get it to start.
Cindy What do you mean? It was working fine yesterday.
Paul Well, I turned the key, I activated the fuel supply and then I pushed the start button, but nothing happened. Am I missing something?
Cindy Oh! Sorry, Paul, I forgot to explain that part. You see, my brother built the scooter out of parts from different models, so the start button isn't actually connected to anything. You have to use the kick pedal to start it.
Paul Well, THAT makes sense … sort of. Here, let me try it. OK, that worked! Thanks, and I'll bring it back this evening.

Cindy Uh, hello? Yes, I've just bought a new hairdryer, and I'm trying to use it for the first time, but nothing is happening. I'm wondering if there's something wrong with it, or if maybe I'm doing something wrong.
Paul Well, let me see if I can help. First of all, have you plugged it into a wall socket?
Cindy Yes, of course I have! And I've checked that the wall socket is on too. Then I set the dryer to HOT, adjusted the airflow and switched it on, but … nothing, like I've said.
Paul Can you check one thing for me? On the plug head, there's a very small round button. Can you press that button once, please?
Cindy OK. Oh, there it goes! So what was the problem?
Paul That's a shut-off button in case the unit overheats. Sometimes, it gets stuck while the product is being shipped.
Cindy Well, thanks! Now I can get ready to go out.

Cindy Excuse me. I was just trying to use the cash machine outside the bank, and it took my card.
Paul Oh, sorry about that. I'm sure you've used a cash machine before, right?
Cindy Yes, of course. I inserted my card, keyed in my PIN and chose my transaction, but then it just stopped – no message or anything.
Paul Let me just check your account here on the computer. Can you just swipe your card in the device there?
Cindy How can I swipe my card when it's stuck in the machine outside?
Paul Oh, sorry. I'm afraid I'm running on autopilot here. Let me just close my window, and I'll come out to the lobby and help you. I'm sure we can work out what's wrong and get your card back without any problem.

Interviewer Welcome to Table Talk. I'm Janet Mason, and my guest today is the youngest recipient of the Young Achievers Award, Dan Carson. Welcome, Dan.
Dan Thanks. It's great to be here.
Interviewer So, you're only fifteen and you've won this prestigious award. What makes you a young achiever?
Dan Do you mean why did they pick me for the award? I guess it's because of my project, which is an idea for a new kind of portable water purification system. I kept hearing that people all over the world lack clean water, so I wanted to come up with something really affordable, unlike most others, and easy to produce. Part of the award programme lets me work with professional engineers and innovators in order to turn my idea into something really useful.
Interviewer And how did you become interested in science and engineering? Is this something that runs in your family?
Dan Well, both my parents are developers of high tech inventions, so it was likely I'd do the same. Luckily, they both encouraged me to explore other things too. I'm actually quite musical, so I play the piano and the violin, and I also love doing sports like tennis and golf. But I think in the same way they do.
Interviewer And how is that?
Dan Oh, I see a problem, I look into it and I try to come up with a solution of some kind. The cool thing about my parents is that they're very adventurous. They never say, 'Oh, that's impossible, that can't work.' They just keep trying.
Interviewer I understand that your house is full of new ideas. Is it fun living with all of that new technology?
Dan Well, it's always interesting. I mean, we have a lot of the latest smart home innovations – a robot cleans the floors, you can look inside the fridge with your smartphone, things like that. But both my parents love messing about with mechanical inventions, and that's where it does get unexpectedly interesting.
Interviewer How do you mean?
Dan For example, my mum invented a bed-making machine. It was meant to pull up the bedcovers, smooth them out and make it all look tidy. Unfortunately, it kept getting stuck at the top of the bed, so you couldn't actually get into bed at night! Another funny one was my dad's face recognition security system. Instead of using a key to open the door, you just looked into a camera and the door unlocked for you. But one day, the system wouldn't recognise any of our faces – and of course none of us had a key because we supposedly didn't need one! We had to call a locksmith in the end.
Interviewer So being the son of inventors has its fun side?
Dan Absolutely. So many inventions just don't work out – but we always learn something new from the failures, and that's what creativity is all about – learning as much as you can from everything you do.

When I'm introduced to strangers as a futurist, they often give me a strange look, as if they thought I'm about to pull out a crystal ball and tell them that they're going to meet the love of their life tomorrow or suggest they not try out for a sports team next week. I'm not surprised nor offended by this reaction. That's because I suspect that not many people are familiar with the field of futurism or futurology. There aren't actually many of us around – our worldwide organisation has fewer than 2000 members, and not all of them are practising professionals. I am, although I neither trained in the field nor do I have an official title. I actually studied to be a mathematician, became interested in statistics, and then – through one of my professors – began working on a project which dealt with possible future trends in population growth, the environment and the quality of life. I will say right now that I do NOT know for certain what the world will be like in 50 or 100 years. I do have some suspicions, but I know that intuition is not a good guide. In my view, one of the most important roles of a futurist is to consider alternatives, and to realise that many unexpected things can happen. What we do is study the past and present, especially the changes taking place right now, and then build up a picture of where these changes might lead us. For example, many people ask me if I think computers will be able to make their own decisions in the future, and a lot of us wonder if this could be a threat to humanity, or if it's simply the inevitable development of modern technology. Well, I don't know what will happen, I do know for certain that smart technology will continue to play a bigger and bigger role in our daily lives, and that there is probably no way to reverse that.

Tim What is that phone you have? It looks ridiculous!
Katie What do you mean, what is it? It's a flip phone, of course! I was given it as a gift.
Tim When was it made? I thought flip phones stopped being produced years ago!
Katie Actually, they are still being made by all the major companies. At one point, they were being phased out slowly because companies thought no one wanted them, but then they realised there was still a demand. As a matter of fact, they've recently become quite fashionable again.
Tim Seriously? But not many things can be done on a flip phone! Can you even access the Internet?
Katie Sure, if you want to. Phone calls are easy to make, and you can send messages easily enough. I have never been given a good enough reason to change to a smartphone.
Tim Well, you have a point. Do they have other advantages?
Katie Well, if you drop it, it won't be damaged because it's so strong. It isn't attractive to pickpockets as it's not the kind of thing that would be bought by criminals, is it? Perfect for me.

Leyland Smart, now 26 years old, is believed to have been one of the cleverest and most infamous computer hackers of all time. Smart is said to have broken into at least 10,000 computer systems in his short career, and people assume he would still be hacking today if not for a surprising occurrence. At the age of 19, he broke into a crowd sourcing account, hoping to take all of the money from it. But, instead of going directly into the account, he stopped and read about the cause the money was being collected for. It was the story of a young boy who had become seriously ill at the age of eight. Evidently, Smart suddenly stopped and asked himself what he was doing and why. It was assumed that he was happy with his crime-fuelled lifestyle, but actually that wasn't the case. At the age of 20, Smart turned himself in to the police, who charged him with numerous counts of theft and computer crime. It is said that Smart is now a completely reformed character, and currently he works for the government in their cybercrimes division.

Customer Excuse me. I wonder if you could help me. I'm looking for a new phone, but I'm not sure which one is best for my needs.
Shop assistant Sure, I'm happy to assist you. What is it you're looking for exactly?
Customer Well, I'm on the hunt for a very tough phone. I do a lot of sports like hiking, kayaking and climbing, and obviously my phone gets dropped in the dirt a lot, and even into water occasionally. It also has to have high quality sound. I'm actually a musician, and I'm very picky about what music sounds like, even on a phone.
Shop assistant OK. Here are two models that might interest you. The first is the SportX3. As you can see, it's very well protected from dirt, water and impact. You can drop it on concrete from 2 metres and nothing will happen. An added bonus is that it was designed for people who listen to music while they do sports, and I've been told the sound quality is excellent. The other choice is the Runner. It doesn't have the same level of protection as the SportX, but the sound quality is amazing.
Customer I like the look of the SportX. What other features does it offer?
Shop assistant It has a very long battery life, which is great if you're out in the wilderness. Another great feature is the adjustable vibration. I know if you're doing things outdoors, you often don't hear or even feel your phone, but it's hard to miss a call with this one.
Customer That sounds perfect. I missed plenty of calls out hiking, but that's partly a question of coverage too. Can I use the phone with any service provider?
Shop assistant Absolutely. It's just like any other phone in that way.
Customer How much is that going to set me back?
Shop assistant The SportX is usually £800, but we're having a special deal right now, so it's only £600. The Runner is £450.
Customer Wow, that's a steep price, isn't it? It sounds as if it's worth it, though. I think I'll take the SportX.
Great! OK, now, if you could just show me how to move my coverage to this phone.
Shop assistant That's pretty simple. First, make sure the phone is fully charged. Then you put the new SIM card right in here. OK, now we turn on the phone. Here's your main screen. The next thing you do is go to the service app. Open the app and it gives you a choice of carriers. Select your service provider, enter your phone number and follow their instructions. It'll be up and running in no time.
Customer Thanks very much. So, do I pay you or ...?
Shop assistant Yes, I can take your payment. Is this a debit or credit card?
Customer It's credit.
Shop assistant Great. I'll be back in just a second.

Man Something's going on with my laptop. Look at this! The same message keeps popping up again and again, and I can't get it to stop. I wonder if it's got a virus or a bot in it. Could that be the issue?
Woman It could easily be a virus, sure. You've tried rebooting it, haven't you?
Man It's been rebooted several times, but that doesn't seem to be fixing things. I could really use some help. Could you have a look? I know you're great with computers.
Woman If you could just reboot it one more time, I'll watch and see what happens.
Man OK, here goes.
Woman Hmm. That's really odd. You could possibly run a system check and see if anything turns up.
Man I've already tried that. I didn't see anything. It couldn't be the modem, could it?
Woman No, the signal is fine. Here's what you could do. First, go to Settings. Then go to the control panel and click on system tools, and then reinstall system.
Man Could you explain that again? I didn't get all of it.
Woman Here, let me do it. Is there anything that you need to save on here?
Man Not really, no. The important stuff is saved in the cloud.
Woman OK, just wait a few minutes. Now we'll restart and ... oh darn! It still isn't working! Well, I'd fix it if I knew how, but evidently there's a more serious problem. I think you should have it looked at by a technician.
Man That's OK. Thanks. You've done everything you could.

Naomi Someone on TV said that young people have no values these days and that all we strive for is money and popularity. It's utter nonsense, don't you think?
Charlie Well, it probably depends on who you have in mind. Lots of teenagers I know worship money. Though I also know lots of other people who stand for more than just that. I personally believe that money does come in handy, but it can't take over other aspects of life.
Naomi Exactly! You mustn't generalise like that guy on TV. He also said that young people surround themselves with expensive gadgets, and these replace their friends. I'd say young people use gadgets like smartphones to get in touch with their friends. I just wish people wouldn't make such judgements!

Charlie Adults often makes judgements like that simply because they don't understand the way we are. We're going to be the same when we grow up.
Naomi No way! I'll make sure I'm different.
Charlie That remains to be seen...

Hi, I've been thinking about what matters in life. I come from a very well-to-do family, we've got all we could possibly wish for, and much more. And you know what? It does not bring much joy. Our house is full of stuff but devoid of time for each other. Let me ask you the same questions I've been pondering about.

How important are things in your life? Your material possessions — things you've saved up money for, got for your birthday or other occasions, things which probably clutter your room or your house. Think about your parents, family members... How many have they accumulated over the years? How much value do they actually add to life? I guess it's much less than you would have thought, isn't it?

Why don't you carry out a task? Take a moment and jot down your ten most expensive material possessions – things which you or your parents have bought. Next to that list, come up with another top ten list: ten things that add the most value to your life. Your list may consist of experiences like seeing your friends over a coffee, watching your favourite movie, going out with your parents, a barbecue with your classmates. Be honest with yourself when you're compiling these lists. Do they have anything in common?

In my case, the answer was ZERO. Quite miserable, isn't it? I intend to re-evaluate things, take more notice of the people around me and give the majority of my possessions away to other people. Well except my mobile phone that is!

CD 2.32

Man It is commonly believed that young people spend a lot of time online and, as a result, lack abilities to develop deep relationships with other people. Do you think that parents can do something to prevent such a situation?
Woman Well, as a mother I believe that we can try to concentrate on important values in everyday life and be a role model for our children.
Man So what values should parents instil in their children?
Woman I am of the opinion that there are three values that each child should be equipped with, and these are empathy, equal dignity and resilience. Without these it's hard to go through life.
Man Why those? I mean, why are they so essential to you in particular?
Woman Well, empathy allows people to form true friendships, respect their partners, and be happy in the future with other people in their lives. It's tremendously important to realise that others also experience fear, anxiety, shame, or joy. It's about being respectful towards other people and their emotions as well as towards ourselves and the emotions we experience.
Man Yes, I agree. It's as important as equal dignity which teaches kids that they aren't better than anyone else. It also helps us to learn to appreciate the most simple and basic thing about us and other human beings, and in the end, these are what's truly valuable in life. Is this how you see it too?
Woman Precisely! Equal dignity does just that. It helps us live at peace with ourselves and others. Last but not least is resilience. Children need to know that important things are worth fighting for, or waiting for. Kids should develop the strength to bounce back from failure too.
Man Oh, yes! I couldn't agree more. Thanks for the advice. I'll bear it in mind when I start my own family.

Interviewer Hi, Adam. It's great to have you here with us today. As you know I'm currently doing some research on today's youth, and one of the areas I'm most willing to explore is young people's attitudes to tolerance. So, let me ask you some questions about yourself and your stance on that – OK?
Adam Sure. Fire away!
Interviewer You attend a secondary school, don't you? And you are still a minor, right?
Adam That's correct. But only until next week!
Interviewer OK. What do you associate with the word tolerance? What springs to mind when you think about it? And, would you call yourself tolerant?
Adam For me it's all about accepting other people's points of view and the choices they make. I stand by this simple rule: live and let live. Personally, I hope I tend to show tolerance towards other people's standpoints. I reckon I'm quite liberal in my way of thinking.
Interviewer OK. Thanks. Would you confirm that most people your age share such an attitude?
Adam I can only speak for my friends, people I know. Most of them hold similar attitudes. We are certainly more tolerant of one another's beliefs, relationship choices and lifestyles than our parents or grandparents, but only provided that people who think differently do not pose a threat to us. We actually talked about it in our social science class last week.
Interviewer What do you mean?
Adam For example, we discussed people with extreme views. We rather tend to accept the perspectives they have, but if those views are used to promote violence, then obviously we're against that.
Interviewer I see. Are you happy to live in a multi-national society?
Adam Well, that's the only society I know. I was raised in the UK before I came to live here, and my assumption is that people respect similar values in this country. Yes, it's absolutely fine by me.
Interviewer Thanks a lot.
Adam You're welcome.

Interviewer Ted, can you tell us something about the newest research into happiness? Apparently, researchers know when in our lives we, the Brits, are the happiest. Is this right?
Ted Yes, indeed. One UK-based foundation conducted this very research and discovered that happiness levels tend to be the highest when you are sixteen, and then again in your 70s. Of course, this doesn't mean that in-between you are all but miserable. Anxiety levels go up in your mid-20s and then the mid-50s. It's when people blame themselves for their failures too.
Interviewer Interesting. How do they account for these trends?
Ted When you're an adolescent, your whole life is ahead of you, you just feel hopeful I guess, and later on, when you become a senior citizen, you don't stress out about work, you aren't bothered by things that used to worry you earlier on like getting a well-paid job.
Interviewer And why do people in-between feel less cheerful?
Ted Unsurprisingly so, it's connected with our financial well-being. Homeowners, people with higher income and those with good health are likely to feel more optimistic, but it's not always the case. People get anxious about their finances, the bills and things. However, your contentment with life also hangs on factors like a satisfying relationship and good physical condition.
Interviewer And where are people the happiest?
Ted The 2019 World Happiness Report pointed to the Scandinavian countries and the Netherlands. All the top countries tend to have high values for all six of the key factors that have been found to boost well-being: income, healthy life expectancy, social support, freedom, trust, and generosity towards other people.
Interviewer I see. Thanks Ted. I'm looking forward to my 70s then ... if I live to that ripe old age, that is.
Ted Look after yourself and you will!

CD 2.35

I'm 18 years old and ever since I remember I have always been involved in some charity work. Recently, I've taken an interest in charity organisations helping children. The main reason is that I come from a poor background, so I know that in some areas children need support. The other reason is a report on children's rights I recently read compiled by an NGO – that is, a non-governmental organisation. It claims that in some European countries about one in four children suffer from poverty, especially in single-parent families and large families. About 20% of children are clinically obese, some percentage suffer from malnutrition and some children coming from racial minorities are discriminated against. Some other reasons why I became worried are that there are places with high CO_2 emission which violates the right to live and grow up in a clean environment. Last but not least, the report mentions the freedom of expression and opinion and states that a child's opinion is sometimes ignored and that parents tend to exercise absolute parental authority.

Of course, there are numerous foundations that run programmes to combat the problems and in many countries you can contact the Ombudsman for Children's Rights. What is more, a lot of organisations promote the well-being of children worldwide. They also provide legal help for victims of children's rights violations and offer support in local projects to help the young. Many teachers remind parents that children have the right to rest, have some free time, and to take part in games and recreational and cultural activities too. Still, though, more must be done to protect the most vulnerable. That's why I've decided to help out. Do you know Janusz Korczak? The famous Jewish doctor, educator and author? He said what has become my motto 'Children are not the people of tomorrow, but people today.' His words are my motivation.

Interviewer Today, we are talking to three young people who have experienced what we may call intercultural dating: Eliana from Israel, Hannah from the USA and Thomas from England. Eliana, what was your experience like?

Eliana I was born into a fairly conservative Jewish family, and in our culture dating is not usually done for fun. It's considered to be a serious matter, the time when two young people meet to see if they're compatible enough to form a steady relationship. It's a sign of being pragmatic, so we tend to date when we are ready to get married. So, imagine my discomfort when I went to Amsterdam on a student exchange at the age of 17, and boys were chatting me up all the time. I didn't realise that informal dating was the social norm there, so I would tell them 'no'. When my Dutch friend eventually explained that all those boys wanted was just to pass the time together, I became more understanding. I even decided to go on a few dates. All in all, I guess it was good for me to realise that the way people date may not necessarily be the same in every country, which made me more open-minded.

Interviewer What about you, Hannah?

Hannah In the USA, dating in groups is not uncommon, at least at the early stages of a relationship. Couples hang around together, go to diners in groups. We are also used to splitting the bill, and we ask each other out. This means that if I'm attracted to a boy, I'll invite him out, end of story. I was in for a bit of a surprise last year, though, when a Brazilian boy joined our class. He came across as very outgoing, so one day I suggested going out. He seemed clearly uncomfortable, but agreed to eat out with me. When we met up in front of the diner, I introduced him to all my friends. He couldn't believe his eyes, and said politely that he was not ready for this, and left. I was not only embarrassed, but also upset. No other boy had treated me like that before! In fact, I found it very impolite. Only later did I find out that in Brazil, girls don't invite boys out, and they don't have group dates, which is why he reacted that way. This was the first time I had experienced such a culture clash.

Interviewer And finally Thomas. You are about to marry a Russian lady. How was your first date?

Thomas To begin with, a total disaster. I managed to commit every possible faux pas on our first date. The first problem was my casual clothes – I was wearing a pair of jeans and a T-shirt, as we do in England when we go out. She, on the other hand, came dressed to kill. Then, I presented her with a bunch of yellow tulips, which, as it turned out, was a gross mistake. Yellow flowers are usually given there to suggest the end of the relationship. But the worst was that I didn't realise that Russian women are more traditional than English women and appreciate small gestures such as opening doors and pulling out their chair at a restaurant. I could see Tamara was not too impressed. Luckily, she didn't get upset. Well, I cared about her, so I did my homework, read up on courtship in Russia, and improved my manners. Next time we met up, the flowers were red. Still, I should have done that before I even asked her out for the first time.
